THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

Military Genius.—The following excellent observations in Dr. Channing's "Remarks on the character of Napoleon Bonaparte," are worthy the attention of those, who think that the Duke of Wellington must be a great statesman because he is a great general.—"Military talent, even of the highest order, is far from holding the first place among intellectual endowments. It is one of the lower forms of genius; for it is not conversant with the highest and richest objects of thought. We grant that a mind, which takes in a wide country at one glance, and understands almost by intuition the positions it affords for a successful campaign is a comprehensive and vigorous one. The General, who disposes his forces so as to counteract a greater force, supplies by skill, science, and genius, the want of numbers; who dives into the counsels of his enemy and who gives unity, energy, and success to a vast sphere of operations, in the midst of casualities and obstructions which no wisdom could foresee, manifests great power. But still the chief work of a general is to apply physical force; to remove physical obstacles; to avail himself of physical advantages; to act on matter, to overcome rivers, ramparts, mountains, and human muscles; and these are not the highest objects of the mind. They demand intelligence of the higher order; and accordingly nothing is more common than to find men eminent in this department, who are almost wholly wanting in the noblest energies of the soul; in imagination and taste, in the capacity of enjoying works of genius, in large views of human nature, in the moral sciences, in the application or analysis and generalization to the human mind and society, and in original conceptions on the great subjects which have enlarged the most glorious understandings. The office of a great general does not differ widely from that of a great mechanician, whose business it is to frame new combinations of physical bodies, to adapt them to new circumstances, and to remove new obstructions. Accordingly, great generals, away from the camp, are commonly no greater men than the mechanician taken from his workshop. In conversation they are often dull. Works of profound thinking on general and great topics, they cannot comprehend. The conqueror of Napoleon, the hero of Waterloo, undoubtedly possesses great military talents; but we have never heard of his eloquence in the senate; or of his sagacity in the cabinet; and we venture to say, that he will leave the world, without adding one new thought on the great themes, on which the genius of philosophy and legislature has meditated for ages."

Washington, April 8.

Among the amendments proposed to the Tariff Bill, Mr. Haynes proposed to add the two following sections :

And be it further enacted, That, on every poune of cotton, the growth and produce of the U. States, which shall be exported therefrom subsequent to the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and tweenty-eight, there shall be allowed and paid a bounty of three cents, to be paid by the collector of the district from which the same shall be so exported ; on every pound of tobacco, the growth and produce of the United States, which shall be exported therefrom subsequent to the said thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight there shall be allowed and paid a bounty of two cents, to be paid by the collector of the district from which the same shall be so exported ; upon every pound of rice, the growth & produce of the United States, which shall be exported therefrom subsequent to the said thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, there shall be allowed and paid a bounty of one cent, to be paid by the collector of the district from which the same shall be so exported ; on every barrel of flour the growth and manufacture of the United States, which shall be exported therefrom subsequent to the said thiertieth day of June, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, there shall be allowed and paid a bounty of one dollar, to be paid by the collector of the district from which the same shall be so exported ; on every barrel of Indian corn meal, the growth and manufacture of the United States, which shall be exported therefrom subsequent to the said thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, there shall be allowed & paid a bounty of six cents, to be paid by the collector of the district from which the same shall be so exported.

And be it further enacted, That, in all cases where the collectors, respectively, shall not have in their hands funds sufficient for the payment of said bounties, they shall issue certificates for the same, which shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated.

From the New-York National Advocate.

National Institution.—The meeting of this society was very fully attended by our most respectable citizens of all occupations. The liberal and praiseworthy object of the society is to devise and carry into effect efficient means for the protection of the industry of the country ; and much as the industry and manufactures require protection at this crisis, the labours and enterprise of American merchants require not less that a bold hand should be laid on that system of things which has brought us all at the feet of England and of English agents. Our merchants are ready to co-operate with other classes in this society for the redress of these wrongs, and we trust the measures in progress and which will soon be presented to the consideration of the community and the Government, will eventually and not remotely produce a change, which will restore to merchants their rights and to manufacturers that degree of support—which will enable them to compete with their English rivals. While the latter are suffering for the want of that protection against British policy and capital which it is the duty of the government and the interest of the nation to give, the former are driven from the richest sources of trade, by the force of English capital and the pernicious facilities afforded the English traders by sales at auction.

While the American merchant and mechanic is called upon for the support of the city, state and general government ; is in duty and by his feelings and the law bound to hold himself ready for the defence of his country, contributing continually of his substance to maintain the character and glory thereof in one way or another, the English merchant among us sits at his ease, taxed neither in person or property and safe from three thousand calls upon his time and his money, which fall to the portion of the native citizen. No wonder then that foreigners have usurped the privileges of trade, and with these immense advantages driven the American trader completely from the field, until there is not at this moment a single American importer of English wollens in this market. The 8 or 10 millions of cloths brought here from England come thro' English agents, they are sold by five or six auctioneers, and if the American merchant would engage at all in the trade, he must submit to go to the auction room and to do the best he can. It is time to drop our self-destroying sympathy for this trade of 8 or 10 millions which is exclusively in the hands of Englishmen ; and let us at least in justice to our own merchants and manufacturers require them to pay the duties in cash, and offer their goods in the market as merchants, not through auctioneers.

We sincere regret, (says the Philadelphia Chronicle,) we announce the death of Major David Lenox, one of the few surviving officers of the Revolution.—His manly and honorable condut through a long life, gained him universal esteem, and no man we believe, ever left fewer enemies.

The citizens of Tennessee have been greeted with the arrival of a steamboat at Knoxville, which has astonished and animated every observer. It ascended the Tennessee river over the Muscle Shoals, and having passed them, it then went up the Holston to Knoxville. Not a single steamboat has ever ascended the James River above Richmond. Why do we suffer almost every other State thus to outship us in the career of improvement ?

[Richmond Enquirer.]

Modest assurance.—The good city of Philadelphia was thrown into a strange agitation, by the fact of a robustious looking man, with a black beard, perambulating the upper parts of that city, and arresting people, calling himself Jacob Hays, high constable of New-York.—Hays being so well known, locks and doors flew open at the sound of his name. His colleague, the high constable of Philadelphia, considering that an official visit was due to him, from Mr. Hays, went in pursuit of, and finally arrested the counterfeit, who turns to be a shoemaker from N. Orleans, and purported to be in search of a man who had set fire to New-York. The mayor committed this Dromio for further enquiry.

Massacre of Snakes.—A person from Northford, states that he recently assisted in killing 41 black snakes, generally from four to five feet in length. He, with two other men, destroyed them with sticks, upon a small area of rocky land, where they had collected for the apparent purpose of sunning themselves. There might have been 50 of the reptiles together, as some few made their escape.—N. H. Journal.

Coolness.—The phlegmatic indifference of the Turkish character was strikingly apparent in a circumstance that occurred in the house of Nazzino. —After [illegible], a wounded Turk threw himself into the sea, & after swimming for sometime, laid hold of the Albone. The men on board perceiving that it was a man whose arms were broken and hanging dead, took him on board. He made a sign that he wished to have the arms cut off. Mr Maremeng, the chief surgeon, complied with his desire. When the operation was [illegible] he begged a pipe, and some tobacco, and sat and smoked his pipe looking about him all the time. As soon as he had done, without saying a word, he plunged into the sea, and swam back again to his own vessel.

Figure of Speech.—A member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, on Tuesday last, closed his speech on the militia bill with the following conclusive argument, "Mr. Speaker, if this bill is postponed, I shall be as crusty as a bed-bug."

PANORAMA EXHIBITION.

THE great Panoramic picture of the City of Paris, the Capital of the Kingdom of France is now exhibiting in the building on the public square in Rampart street.

The view is taken from the roof of the south end of the palace of the Tuilleries ; the spectator must therefore immagine himself placed on this elevated situation which commands an extensive prospect over the whole city.

Immediately under the eye of the spectator in a northern direction, is the roof of the King's appartments, and on the right thereof the long picture gallery stretching eastward as far as the Louvre. —This gallery bounds the place de Carousel on the south side and the new gallery on the north, in the centre of this square is open the triumphal arch. On this square Bonaparte was wont to review his battalions previous to their departure for their respective destinations, and here oft the walls resounded with the clang of martial music. On the west side of the palace the spectator looks down on the Garden of the Tuelleries, and beyond that in the distance is seen the palace of the Garde du Meubles, and the woods of the Champ Elysees in the distance.

When we consider that Paris has been the theatre of so many great political events which have convulsed Europe for thirty years past, few, if any subjects of equal interest for a picture could be offered to the public.
