THE BEE.

PRINTED DAILY, BY F. DESALP.
Peter-Street, between Bourbon & Royal.
THURSDAY, NOV. 13, 1828.

☞ We have been informed that returns from all the parishes have been received, which give the Jackson ticket a majority of 452 votes in the whole state.

The following letter from St. Barts, dated 20th ult., is copied from the New Haven Daily Herald.

"The captain, officers and crew of a piratical schr. fitted out of St. Thomas, seem to be tried at St. Kitts, and in all probability will be condemned for execution. They captured the Catalonio from Manilla for France, and put both crews and passengers, 37 in number, into a leaky boat, and when blowing hard, some miles distant from the Canary Islands. The brigs were sent to Santa Cruz. The English brig was taken charge of by a [illegible] of war, and sent to St. Kitts, and she afterwards fell in with the pirate off St. Eustatia, who ran in and anchored, [illegible] by Johnny Bull, who very politely requested the civil authorities to grant permission to take her under his sole convoy to St. Kitts, to be tried for piracy.—The French brig had previously [illegible] in St. Eustatia several cask of [illegible] &c. and when in sufficient depth of water was scuttled and sank, with 70 ton of Block tin in her hold. Some leading characters who are prize-agents in St. Eustatia, must feel unpleasant at the developements of these transactions.

The French Admiral in Martinique, is expected to make an inquiry about the French Brig and cargo.—The Doctor (an American,) and a boy, have been admitted as King's evidence to save their necks—but 40 others are in jeopardy, and likely [illegible] as a warning to others. An American brig from Bath arrived a few days since, was boarded in the latitude of Bermuda by a [illegible] and plundered of every thing eatable, drinkable, or wearable, except what they had on their back!

We have no fore-escaped hurricanes, but there were two severe gales experienced to the northward on the 19th ult. in latitude 38. [illegible] vessels have arrived from Bath in distress.

P. S. Sept. 24th—A boat has just arrived from St. Kitts, [illegible] the pirates ([illegible] boys,) have been condemned for execution, including the Doctor; who, it was proved, was a part owner. Report adds, he offered $70000 dollars for his life, without any effect; [illegible] not heard the exact particulars yet.

The opinion expressed, in several of the English papers, that the present ministry are about to change their course with regard to the Roman Catholics of Ireland, appears from some of their remarks, to be founded, partly, on Mr. Dawson's speech at the anniversary celebration of the relief of Derry. This gentleman is the brother-in-law of Mr. Peel, and has hitherto been a staunch opponent of the Catholic claims. In this speech he declares his belief that the present system cannot be preserved, but that means must be devised for restoring legal authority and securing the institutions of society, with satisfaction to all parties. We give an extract from his address, which was frequently interrupted by the hisses of his auditors:

Philad. Daily [illegible].

What I say is, that the Catholic Association, by securing the voluntary contributions of the people, constitutes to itself a power from which it may supply the powers of war, or undermine, by endless litigation and persecution, the established institutions of the country. Such is the power of this new phenomenon, and I will ask any man, how it been allowed to exercise its influence? In every place where the Catholic population predominates it is all powerful and irresistable—it has subdued two thirds of Ireland by its denunciations, more completely than Oliver Cromwell or King William ever subdued the country by the sword. The Aristocracy, the Clergy, the Gentry, and all property trembles at it. In those devoted regions a perfect abandonment of all the dignity and influence belonging to station and rank seems to have taken place, or if a struggle [illegible] as in Clare, it is only to insure the triumph of this daring autocrat. In those devoted parts of Ireland where the Protestant and Catholic population are pretty equally divided, the same influence is felt, if not in so aggravated a degree, at least so mischievously, that confidence and security are alike uncertain. Amongst the two classes we see dispute and superstition, a perfect alienation from each other in sentiment and habits, and an unappeasable desire to [illegible] the other's strength [illegible] institutions of society [illegible] the ordinance of [illegible] law, [illegible] the people in the [illegible] of the Catholic Justice is impeached, [illegible] magistracy is condemned or supported, according as it is supposed to lean to the Orangeman or the Roman Catholic, and even trade and barter are regulated by the same unhappy distinction of religious feeling. Such, gentlemen, is the picture of this country, a country, possessing every material, by the bounty of God & the intelligence of its natives, to become great powerful and wealthy, but in which every hope is blasted, and every exertion frustrated by the unhappy dissentions of its inhabitants. And now, gentlemen, it is time to ask ourselves the question, what must be the result of the disordered state of things, and such a complete overthrow of all the relations of society? —Some gentlemen will say rebellion—and the sooner it comes, the sooner we will be able to crush it. (Loud cheers, which lasted several minutes.) Now I entertain a very different opinion—it is not the interest, and I firmly belive it is not the wish of the Roman Catholic leaders, to drive the people to rebellion.—(Loud hisses.) We have the best security for the purity of their intentions. (Hisses.—A voice, respect. In the stake which they hold in the country, and the moral conviction that they would be the first victims of a rebellion.—(Loud cries from several voices, "No, no, we would be the first.")—It a rebellion should take place, it will not be from the orders or example of the Roman Catholic Leaders—(Hisses)—but from the readiness of the two contending parties to come to conflict with each other, and from the impossibility of checking the [illegible] of popular phrenzy. If the two parties be goaded and exasperated against each other by inflammatory speeches or [illegible] misrepresentations. But the result will be a [illegible] of society far worse than rebellion; it will be a revolution—a revolution not effected by the sword, but by exterminating the institutions of the country, and involving every establishment, civil, political, and religious.

[illegible] Murder in France.—On the 4th [illegible] a great crowd assembled in front of the house of a silk manufacturer named Pocheron residing in the rue St. George's, at Lyons; who was throwing pieces of money from the window at the heads of the passengers. The police, informed of this assemblage proceeded to the spot to disperse it. Having entered Pocheron's house, they found him wounded by many blows of a knife on the head, and [illegible] tobacco. When interrogated touching the cause of this terrible catastrophe, the unfortunate man answered with the most perfect coolness, that seeing his daughter suffering, and having himself long suffered from acute pains in the head, which allowed him no repose, he had determined on taking away her life, and had afterwards vainly endeavoured to kill himself. Pocheron, who is about fifty years of age, was led to prison, and placed at the disposal of the Procureur du Roi.

[French Paper.

On Tuesday afternoon, between the hours of three and four o'clock, the utmost alarm was created in the menagerie belonging to Mr. Wombwell, in the Kingsland-road, from the enraged state of the leopardess; under the following [illegible] circumstances:—A man was employed to paint the exterior of the [illegible] by some accident he overset a pot of paint through the grating of the den over the back of the leopardess, who [illegible] directly endeavoured to get the paint off by rubbing her back with her foot, but finding it did not succeed, they imprudently scrubbed her back and sides with turpentine, she became enraged, and in the most furious manner flew at her keeper, got him down, and dreadfully bit him upon the head and arms: but assistance being procured, he was released from his dangerous situation.

A writer in the London Morning Chronicle holds this language:

"There is no doubt of the vast superiority of the Americans to the English in naval gunnery; and the reason is obvious. In America, the officers must learn the naval service—in England the relations of the officers must learn their Parliamentary service—and this makes all the difference. The Guerriere, Java, Macedonian, and Shannon, lost in their actions with American frigates, more by one-third than our whole fleet in the great victory off St. Vincent's. The following table will show the immense destruction effected by the American frigates compared to [illegible] any other nation. The first column is a rough calculation of the guns, [illegible] and the second an accurate statement of the killed and [illegible]

So that the unglorious battle off Camperdown did not cost a single the loss of engaging four American frigates, and nearly the same may be said of the most desperate of all naval fights on record—that of the Nile. The Java frigate, of only 49 guns, was taken by the Americans, lost within [illegible] many as the Téméraire, 98 guns; within four as many as the Victory, 100 guns; and within a few as many as the Royal Sovereign, of 100, in the battle of Trafalgar; and yet the Victory and Royal Sovereign were Lord Nelson's and Lord Collingwood's flag ships, and bore the brunt of the battle."
