NEW-ORLEANS:
WEDNESDAY, MAY 20, 1829.

From the New-York Herald.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.—The late Grand Jury not able to find cause of complaint against any of the persons engaged in the abduction or secretion of Stephenson; did not separate, we are told, until they had taken a measure calculated, if it could be enforced on this free community, to keep the public as ignorant of the villains engaged in that abduction, as they themselves could desire. We are told that the foreman of that Grand Jury, by direction, presented us of the Morning Herald, to his honor the Recorder, as persons who had offended against the character and dignity of his court. The Grand Jury were so delicate as not to indict us in their own case, but we understand the Recorder has handed the matter over to Mr. Maxwell the district attorney, who will bring it before the next Grand Jury. We understand the article to which the Grand Jury took exception was that in which we quoted two lines of Shakspear. The libellous matter is as follows:

"In the corrupted currents of this word,
Offences gilded hand may shove by justice."

We made no application of the lines, and do not mean to. It seems the Grand Jury have, and tell the world—"you mean us." So much for being staid and sober and never cracking a joke. The merry editor of the Enquirer has quoted Shakspear ten times over, and no Grand Jury even thought of indicting him for it. The Post is forever pelting his latin—and bad latin too, at all who come in the way, and the learned editor of the Commercial keeps a dictionary of quotations ready for every occasion. The lot has fallen upon Jonah. What is meant by the procedure, time will determine. But if that body of men, or any other equally or more or less potent, think to silence men's thoughts and tongues by such threats, they will find themselves mistaken. The time has not come when the liberty of the press is to be thus trammelled; and when high names "and gilded hands" can place a stopper upon free enquiry. Our silence, when public justice is concerned, is not to be forced by intimidation, or secured by favor. We are ready for the trial.

CATHOLIC EMANCIPATION.

The zeal with which the ministry and their friends press foward the cause of Irish Emancipation, is fully paralleled by the warmth with which the opposition speak and write against it. In Bell's Weekly Messenger of March 8th, we find the following remarks:—

"The fatal moment appears now to have arrived, when the integrity of our constitution is to be assailed and the free Protestantism of the Church of England demolished. We say, with pride that pure Protestantism, to which our civil liberties owe their strength and maturity, and by the assistance of which, both our temporal and spiritual welfare, by the providence of God, have advanced to an unexpected height. The time, however, is come for all human things to have an end, when that Protestant Church is to be surrendered up, and laid at the feet of its most implacable enemies. The people now must fly for refuge to the House of Lords and the Crown.

"Should this bill pass, with which ministers have proceeded in the first stage, we must immediately bid adieu to that preeminence which we have hitherto enjoyed in the eyes of all the world. As a Protestant community we shall lose our former station and reputation, and shall no longer be considered as the only country upon the face of the earth, which would yield up every human consideration, and submit to every temporal sacrifice, before it would suffer the purity of its religious establishment to be impaired the slightest degree.

"It would be idle to talk of the measure, introduced on Thursday last, in any other way than as an unconditional surrender. It is not a compromise;—a matter of conditions, and terms, but as pure and absolute a surrender as ever Mr. O'Connell and the Irish Association could dictate. There is no capitulation, no decent treaty,—no bargain,—no reciprocity. Popery is at once welcomed into the citadel, and marches in with drums beating and flying colours, and with the sounds of victory and triumph deafening all around her."

In regard to the opinion here expressed as to the degree of concession proposed by the ministry, the Messenger seems to be in an error. Mr. O'Connell at the meeting at the Thatched House, expressed himself opposed to the advance of qualification for the elective franchise from 40 shillings to ten pounds, which must deprive of the right of voting, a vast number of freeholders who now possess that privilege. This certainly looks like capitulation; and the agreement to this provision by the Catholic party in general, is spoken of by many of the English papers as an unexpected display of moderation.

(From the N. Y. Morn. Herald.

From an English paper.

Some idea of the excitement which prevails on the Catholic question, even in Parliament, may be gathered from the following remarks in the House of Commons, by Col. Wilson, and the manner in which they were received.

"I am sorry to differ on any subject from the government of my royal master; but I should act as a traitor to my constituents, I should act also as a traitor to my own conscience, if I did not oppose them on this. I do not care for ministers. I do not mind who they are. The appointment of my royal master is enough for me.—(Cries of "Hear!" mingled with great laugter.) Whether they are whigs or tories, it's all one to me.—(Laughter.) While they act conscientiously I'll support them. While they act otherwise I'll oppose them. This has been my language always; this is my language now. I care not, I say, who the men are, the appointment of my royal master is good enough for me.—(Bursts of laughter.) I don't care whether ministers are whigs or tories; I say so frankly, it's all the same to me. (Laughter continued.) I am sorrow gentlemen should smile; but I shall be glad if they have no occasion, before long, to weep for the consequences of what they are doing. I like the present ministers well enough, but I regret to say I cannot pull with them on this occasion. I say, that if they attempt to force this measure down our throats—(great laughter)—I am sorry that my honorable friends opposite will not hear me. I ask you, sir, whether, if I were silent, entertaining the sentiments which I entertain, I should not be acting as a traitor to my own conscience?—(Tumultuous laughter.) I am sorry that my friends on the other side of the house are uneasy at my remarks; but I regret still more, that ministers should calmly and deliberately ask their royal master and mine to yield this measure as a stepping-stone to the scaffold where he will lose his head.)—A laugh.)

(From a Paris paper.)

We are assured that a young Curate of St. Axrain has been cited by the Judge of Armajon, and been summoned before the King's Attorney of Corbeil, as accused of various attacks on female chastity. He is accused of seduction and even of violence on some very young girls. It is added that in the church was to be heard, the scene of his odious crimes. Mention is made of a young and beautiful woman who is supported by the generosity of a rich gentleman whose kindness was menaced with losing should she not yield her virtue to this infamous hypocrit.

GERMANY.—Frankfort, March 6.—Many circumstances seem to confirm the recent rumour of a loan which the house of Rotshchilds have been commissioned to negociate on account of the Ottoman Porte, upon the guaranty of Austria. Considerable quantities of cloths called levantines, ordered from the manufacture of Belgium, and forwarded to their places of destination by the way of Vienna and Trieste, are regularly paid for in drafts drawn on the same house. It is known also, that the extensive manufactories of arms, established at Wienevisch Neustadt, and Saint Pœlten (in Austria,) have been, within the last six or eight months, in extraordinary activity, and that immense transportations of articles of that sort, such as guns, pistols, &c. are directed continually towards Belgrade and other places on the Turkish frontiers. It is all but affirmed that the Porte pays not yet any interest on the loans, and that a portion is retained by the Austrian government.

WRECKS.—We learn by the arrival this morning of the schr. Spartan, in 13 days from Key-West, that the following vessels have been wrecked on Florida Reef; brig Alliance, Latterman, of Laguira, for Marseilles, with a cargo of logwood, sugar, rum and pimento—brig Creole, Hall, of New-Orleans, for New-York, 10 days, cargo molasses, sugar, rum and pimento—brig Albert, Woodbury, of Charleston, for Havana, waiting to settle salvage; and ship Britania, Lamb, of Jamaica, repairing.
