We received yesterday, supplying New York dates of the 8th, Philadelphia of the 5th, Baltimore of the 7th, and Washington of the 8th instant. Upon attentive perusal we find no intelligence from abroad; and little of any interest in the domestic department.

The Lowell (Massachusetts) Journal, nominates the hon. Daniel Webster as a candidate for the next presidency.

The Boston papers states that great numbers of counterfeit American cent pieces are in circulation in that city.

Miss Fanny Kemble, the vocalist, is about to return to England. A Philadelphia paper says, "We are sorry she has not met with success in this country, as she is known to be in all respects deserving.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
March 6th, 1833.

Congress having by an act passed on the second instant, authorized the secretary of the treasury to "lend on interest the indemnity under the treaty of indemnity concluded at Paris on the fourth of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirty, between the United States of America, and his majesty the king of the French upon a pledge of the stock of the United States, or of the bank of the United States, or of shares of the United States, subject nevertheless to be repaid to the public treasury whenever the commissioners appointed under the said treaty shall by their award direct to whom the said fund with the accumulated interest shall be distributed:

In pursuance thereof, Notice is now given, That proposals will be received from the bank of the United States or other incorporated institutions, or from individuals, until the 20th instant, for borrowing the same, if from the bank of the United States without any pledge of stock, and if from others upon a pledge of stock of the bank of the United States at par to an amount equal to the sum borrowed, for the entire net proceeds of the first instalment under the said treaty, amounting to $961,240 30 or for any part thereof not less than $100,000, to be repaid agreeably to the provisions of the said act.

LOUIS McLANE,
Secretary of the treasury.

Rufus Wilmot Haughton, editor of the Boston Atlas, who was formerly reporter for one of the Washington papers, in an article in his paper on the subject, says:

"The best stenographer at Washington, is Joseph Gales the principal editor of the National Intelligencer. He possesses great dexterity in familiar with the business of the house and with all public affairs, and so well acquainted with every subject that is brought up, that he never misunderstands the arguments of the speaker. His accuracy is wonderful. We recollect to have heard Mr. P. P. Barbour, of Virginia, once say, after reading a report of half an hour's speech taken down by Mr. Gales, that he believed Mr. Gales had not varied in even one word from the speech as it was delivered. Mr. Randolph, however, always gave him a severe trial; for his parenthesis ran into each other in the colors of a rainbow, and it was no ordinary task to follow the right line of demarcation.

Mr. Gales has now in his employ a reporter, whose abilities vie with his own. It is Mr. Stansbury. He is not a stenographer, but he is possessed of so tenacious a memory, that by the aid of two or three of the most important words of a speech, he can recall the whole immediately. He is a man of very high order of talent and finished education.

Captain Davis, late of the ship Cassander, arrived at Boston from New Orleans, states that on the 16th ult. in sight of Cape Cod, was fired at and brought to by an armed ship. Captain D. was ordered on board with his papers; his manifest was doubted, and sent on board again with an officer with orders to remove the hatches, and examine her cargo, to which captain D. objected, and informed the officer, if he attempted to take off the hatches, he must send six men from the ship to do it; he then demanded payment for the shot fired. Captain D. refused, and the officer finally left the ship—first endorsing the manifest that the Cassander had been boarded by H. M's ship Tweed. Captain D. however, is of opinion that it was a piratical vessel, and not a British ship of war.

The secretary of the navy.—It is stated in the New York Standard, (and we have no doubt it is correctly) that Mr. Woodbury is to be transferred to the treasury department. It will be a circumstance [illegible] to the pride and attachment of the democracy of New England, to see the usefulness of this distinguished representative statesman of the north, extended and displayed in another important situation, and one for which he is so eminently qualified at this peculiar crisis, by his talents, sound judgment, [illegible] of manners, firmness, and strength of character. When president Jackson displayed that knowledge of character for which he is so justly distinguished, by calling governor Woodbury to the navy department, it diffused the most heartfelt satisfaction among the republican ranks in this part of the country, to have this honor conferred on one who has stood in the senate of the U. States, unmoved by the degeneracy and apostacy around him, the sole representatives of the democracy of the north. In the navy department, by his devotion to the interests and glory of our navy, and by his prompt and energetic protection of our commerce, he has maintained the high character of our country at home and abroad, and "won golden opinions" even from the opposition. The mercantile community will regret this removal from the navy department, but that regret will be diminished by the reflection that they will have the benefit of his services in the treasury department where the republican party may justly indulge the anticipation, that he will fully maintain the high reputation which he has heretofore acquired, in the various important stations to which he has been called in the course of a political career, full of honor to him, and usefulness to his country.

Extracts from two letters, dated on board the United States Schooner Peposlos, lying at Port Praya, St. Jago, one of the Cape de Verd Isles, January 5, 1833.

"We arrived here yesterday after a passage of thirty-six hours from St. Vincent, where we lay long enough to wood, water, and paint the vessel (five days) How long we will remain here, is impossible for me to say, but I think we shall sail about the 6th or 8th inst. for Sierra Leone and along the coast of Africa.

The accounts you see in the papers respecting the wretchedness, and want of the inhabitants of these islands, are by no means exaggerated as regards the poorer classes. I have witnessed such scenes since I have been among them, as I never wish to see again. From the vessel we can see hundreds of half starved men, women and children at the custom house, receiving their portion of soup from Mr. Merril, the American consul at this port, who had humanely volunteered his services in this benevolent vocation. He assured me that he had not a moment to spare for himself as all his time is consigned to attending to these poor creatures.—They flock in here from Mayo, Fogo, and Brava to receive their pittance of the contribution. In a sort of Calaboose before which the American consul stands out the provisions brought from the United States, there are a number of poor wretches of all ages and sexes who are too weak to stand. When I first went in I absolutely sickened at the sight. In one corner lay an old woman dead—and in the middle of the room lay a girl about 18, to all appearances in the same condition. I inquired of a Portuguese who had gone in with us whether she was dead. He said no, and going up to her, pushed her with his foot, saying, "arrive, arrive," as he would to a dog.

Yesterday, we fired a salute with our colours at half mast, on receiving the intelligence of the death of Charles Carroll. At St. Nicholas the famine has more than half depopulated the island. At St. Vincents they have now enough to eat, but a large heap of human bones were pointed out to me by a native, who said they were the remains of the victims of hunger.

I asked a negro soldier who was parading before the governor's house, and who said he was a sergeant, whether he was a Mingolita or a Podrolta—he said he did not know, but that the governor knew. By the bye the governor and his black lieutenant paid us a visit, and were saluted with nine guns. We had scarcely anchored here before a dozen boats came along side loaded with all sorts of tropical fruit—oranges, plaintains, pine apples, cocoa nuts, &c. all of which can be bought for a trifle.

"We are becalmed in this sultry latitude, and almost dead with heat. We are quite lucky to-day, however, for we have drifted in sight of an American brig, and have hailed that she is bound to the United States, and will carry our letters. We have now been absent from the United States about two months, and to credit old seamen, we have had a fairly boisterous time of it, at least for the [illegible] voyage. We arrived at Fayal on the 26th [illegible] on the 29th—touched at Sal, St. Vincents, (St. Jago,) whence I write to you. We [illegible] on the 7th inst. for the coast of Africa; and [illegible] are almost within sight of land, and can [illegible] we must await the pleasure of this calm. As [illegible] State we have heard but little. He is said to be [illegible] about the coast. I hope we may fall in with him [illegible] of us shall then return to the U. States. It was said at Port Praya, that he chased a brig into that harbor a few weeks ago. We have also heard a man who was on board the Mexican when she was robbed, who says the pirate behaved more like a gentleman than we.
