PANORAMA DE PARIS.

Une grande peinture panoramique de la ville de Paris est maintenant ouverte au public dans la place d'Orléans.

La vue est prise du haut du toit de la partie méridionale des Tuileries, en conséquence le spectateur doit se figurer qu'il est placé dans cette admirable élevée qui commande une partie considérable de la capitale.

Immédiatement sous les yeux du spectateur, dans le sens sont les combles des appartemens du Roi, et sur la droite la belle galerie des tableaux se prolonge jusqu'au Louvre. Cette galerie borne la place du Carrousel vers laquelle et la nouvelle galerie vers le quai. Au milieu du cette place s'élève l'arc de triomphe d'où Napoléon avait coutume de passer en revue ses légions avant leur départ pour leurs immortelles campagnes, et cette enceinte a maintes fois retenti de la musique guerrière [illegible] du palais, le spectateur plonge sur le jardin des Tuileries, et au delà [illegible] il apperçoit le palais [illegible] et les Champs Elysées.

Si l'on considère de combien de grands événemens politiques Paris est le théâtre, événemens qui durant une trentaine dernières années ont bouleversé l'Europe, on connoîtra l'intérêt [illegible] sujet de peinture ne pouvait offrir plus d'intérêt au public.

—Ce [illegible] est ouvert au public, tous les jours depuis 9 heures jusqu'à 5 de l'après-midi. Entrée: quatre escalins par personne, ou une piastre par abonnement.

NEW-ORLEANS:

THURSDAY, MAY 22, 1828.

Decision of the Supreme Court.

Yesterday, the Supreme Court gave the decision concerning the Writs of Mandamus directed by the Judge of the 1st District Court, against the City Council; the conclusion of which, [illegible] are in the following terms:—

"We conclude that the act of the legislature in 1816 did not violate the constitution; that the Court of the 1st district was consequently without jurisdiction; that its proceedings were coram non judice, that the appellee derived no authority from the writ of mandamus and was guilty of a trespass in making the retrenchment of the appellants.

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the judgment of the Parish Court be annulled, avoided and reversed; that there be judgment for the plaintiffs, and that the cause be remanded with directions to the judge to ascertain the damages sustained by them in the premises, and that the appellee pay costs in this Court.

From the Canadian Courant.

Upper Canada.—Some very extraordinary proceedings took place in the Court of King's Bench, at York, on the 12th inst. These proceedings must be read with deep interest, as they show a state of political excitement hitherto unparalleled in Upper Canada. With the particular nature of the libels with which Mr. Collins is charged we are unacquainted—they are, however, political, and seem to be looked on by the people as an attempt on the part of the government to abridge the liberty of the press, which they are determined to resist, as "numbers of persons were rallying around Mr. Collins, anxious to become his bail." Judge Willis seems decidedly on the side of Mr. Collins. The Canada Advocate says that, when the Grand Jury presented the Solicitor General, and J. E. Small, Esq. barrister at law, as having aided and assisted in the murder of the late Mr. Kidout, these two gentlemen unrobed themselves of their gowns, and sat down in Court in charge of the Sheriff, in plain clothes.

We believe that at no time have party politics been carried to such a pitch even in Lower Canada, as they are at present in the sister Province. Since the introduction of the Alien or Naturalization Bill into the Legislature of Upper Canada, that province has been in a state of inquietude, the population being in a great measure strived against the local government, and looking on its every act with a jealous eye. Speaking of these extraordinary proceedings in the Court of King's Bench, the Colonial Advocate says—"This province is in a terrible situation; the government exists; but is it respected, is it esteemed, is it honored? On the contrary, are not the proclamations, the measures, the plans, the very improvements proposed by the executive, distrusted and suspected by the great mass of the people?—This is by no means a desirable, nor is it a natural state of affairs in a prosperous province. The truth cannot be hid; it is [illegible] and nothing less than an able as well as an impartial administration of justice can prevent the embers of discontent from kindling into a flame the moment the spirit is applied."

Distress of the lower classes in Great Britain.—Numerous accounts are contained in the papers of the distress and poverty of the lower classes. The Edinburg Scotsman, of the 15th March, says, "it is impossible to describe the dreadful state of suffering and destitution to which a portion of the working classes in this city are reduced. In times of ordinary prosperity, no tradesmen ever thought of purchasing less than a peck of oatmeal at a time; indeed a pound of meal was never asked for, except by wretched creatures depending on charity. Matters are now sadly changed in this respect. Two extensive victualliers in Canongate, state that for every individual who purchase a whole peck of meal at a time, there are on an average twenty-four who can only reach a pound. This lamentable fact proves the extreme privations which numbers of the working [illegible] are undergoing."

Fast in the East.—At a moment when the attention of all Europe is directed towards the proceedings of the Ottoman, the following expressions of Bonaparte, addressed to Sir Hudson Lowe, at St. Helena, will be read with interest. Russia has still her designs upon Constantinople. To obtain my consent to his projects upon Turkey, was the great wish of the Emperor Alexander. But in vain; I will [illegible] the Crown of the Czars [illegible] will [illegible] Constantinople [illegible] Europe [illegible] Russia [illegible] France and England are the only powers [illegible] opposing their schemes. I always felt this, and always [illegible] the Turks, tho' I hated them [illegible]

From the Philadelphia Daily Chronicle

A friend has furnished us with the subjoined statement of the population of the city of New-York, at different periods, from 1697 to 1825 inclusive. The increase from 1820 to 1825 is very great indeed, but a large [illegible] must consist of other than [illegible] The number of foreigners [illegible] annually resorting to that city cannot, no doubt, to the credit of humanity, [illegible] many of them [illegible] in other respects. But it is, probably, owing to the same cause that the New-York police reports, and the proceedings of their criminal courts, bear so strong a resemblance to the same department in the London Papers.

Population of New-York.—1697, 4,800 [illegible]56, 15,000; 1731, 21,806; 1756, [illegible] 33,131; 1801, 60,489; [illegible] 83,189; 1810, [illegible] 166,033.

Indian Population.—That of the Cherokees is estimated at 9000; the Chickasaws at 3,625; the Choctaws at 21,000; and the Creeks, [illegible] Total 53,625. They are [illegible] increasing.

Counterfeiting.—Counterfeit Twenty dollar Notes on the Bank of the United States [illegible] order of Lea[illegible] No. 398, dated the 19th [illegible]24, are in circulation. The general appearance of the note is good; the President's name remarkably well executed, [illegible] ink is rather blacker than the genuine.

Affairs of Honor.—The following extraordinary results of a number of duels, we copy from one of our London papers.—N. Y. Ev. P.

Spirit of Duelling.—The Tasmanian, (published at Van Diemen's Land) after announcing the arrival at Hobart Town, on the 10th of July, of the ship Harvy, capt. Findley, from England, via the Cape of Good Hope, where she landed troops, and remained about six weeks, says—"By this vessel we have arrived J. Williams, Esq. barrister-at-law, son of Mr. Williams, a professional gentleman of high respectability in London, and J. Noble, Esq. nephew of D'Arcy Wentworth, Esq. of Sidney. These gentlemen have been involved in very embarrassing and annoying circumstances since their departure from England. It appears that a detachment of the 39th regiment embarked in the Harvey for the Cape, commanded by Captain Elrington, son of Major Elrington, of Sydney, under whose orders were Lieutenants Bonnin, Wilson, and [illegible] Some disagreeable misunderstandings which occurred before the ship left the English Channel, unhappily increased so much during the voyage, that the military men and the civilians were upon the most unpleasant terms. On their arrival at the Cape, in consequence of certain strong expressions which Mr. Williams had found himself called upon to apply to some of the military, he was waited upon by an officer of the 39th to invite him to a meeting with Lieutenant Bonnin. This gentleman had hardly performed his functions, when he was seconded by another officer from Lieutenant Wilson, who, in his turn, was followed by a third similar invitation from Lieutenant Peck. Mr. Williams expressed some astonishment at such a succession of visitors, but promised them all that he would not fail to accept their invitations in due order, if he had life enough left in him to enable him so to proceed. He did so; for, strange to say, [illegible] the three [illegible] encounters—wounding him very severely [illegible] quicksilver accounts—and not returning the fire of the third. Not so Mr. Noble. The two gentlemen, Messrs. Wilson and Bonnin, not content with Mr. Williams's affairs considered it necessary to repeat the operations with Mr. Noble.—This gentleman did every thing in his power to avoid the unpleasant extremity which he saw it was wished to bring him to. Mr. Williams stated plainly that Mr. Noble was a man not very likely to make child's play of such matters, but in vain. Lieut. Wilson first encountered him, and receiving a slight wound, expressed himself satisfied. But, unhappily, a different fate awaited Lieut. Bonnin; for, at the first fire, Mr. Noble's shot penetrated his temple, and he fell dead! Thus ended this most extraordinary affair. The two gentlemen were committed to prison, tried by the Bungalow for murder, but acquitted, as it did not appear for want of sufficient evidence, to establish the fact of the duel having taken place. A Public Meeting of enquiry was held, in consequence of this [illegible] and [illegible] Chief.

From the Boston Evening Bulletin.

Gratitude.—In the books of Justice there are often heavy outstanding charges against Human Nature; and whenever a trifle can be obtained to words liquidating the debt, it ought immediately to be placed upon the credit side of the account. The opposing traits of character exhibited in the following statement, may be considered as fairly balanced against each other.

A few days since, the [illegible] of our insolvent laws was exercised upon the person of a poor debtor, who was dragged from his family and locked up. Last evening, some police officers on a tour of duty, happened to look in [illegible] the prison; they found the wife and [illegible] children—one of the latter [illegible] expired, and the remainder dangerously ill. The officers charitably undertook to represent the case to the creditor, who forthwith released the prisoner's release—thus displaying more humanity and [illegible] than required of him by "the [illegible] such case made and provided."

PANORAMA EXHIBITION.

THE great Panoramic picture of the City of Paris, the Capital of the Kingdom of France is now exhibiting in the building on the [illegible] corner of Rampart street.

The view is taken from the roof of the south end of the palace of the Tuileries; the spectator must therefore imagine himself placed on this elevated situation, which commands an extensive prospect over the whole city.

Immediately under the eye of the spectator [illegible] the Tuileries, and the right [illegible] the long picture gallery [illegible] extending eastward [illegible] the Louvre.—This gallery bounds the [illegible] on the south side and the new gallery on the north, in the centre of this square is seen the triumphal arch. On this square Bonaparte [illegible] to review his battalions previous to their departure for their respective destinations, and here oft the walls resounded with the clang of martial music. On the west side of the palace the spectator looks down on the Garden of the Tuileries, and beyond that in the distance is seen the palace of the Luxembourg, and the woods of the Champs Elysees in the distance.

While we consider that [illegible] has [illegible] theatre of so many [illegible] and events which have [illegible] place for thirty years past, [illegible] of [illegible] of equal interest [illegible] place [illegible] to the public.
