TO COTTON PLANTERS. The subscribers are offering for sale the improved Cotton Press, lately invented by Dr Rowell, of Grand Gulf, and manufactured by Messrs James Wilson & Co., of Cincinnati and are prepared to fill orders for any number wanted.

The threads of both screw and nut being cut by lathes out of solid iron, fit each other with great accuracy; and having an equal bearing on all the threads at the same time, and not liable to cut or bind, they work free and with remarkable ease and power—a single horse being sufficient to press a bale as hard as desired.

Since the introduction of Dr Newell's press, many alterations have been time to time been made, by which the weight of the press and the strength of its parts have been much increased, and its operation rendered as easy as possible. With the assistance of the drawing and description, any carpenter can easily construct one. The press being suspended to the joist of the gin room, takes up but little room, especially when two horses are used with short levers. Much time and trouble is saved in not having the screw pressed in the second story or lint room, as the operators never have to go below.

It makes a very handsome bale, and works with such ease and expedition, that three hands can press twenty bales in a day.

All who have seen the press, many of which are in operation in the neighborhood of Grand Gulf and Natchez, decide it to surpass all others in simplicity, strength and durability, and in saving time and labor. The price of screw and castings, without forgings, is $200 each on delivery, purchaser paying freight and commissions. Apply to
