STATE LEGISLATURE,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Substance of the sitting of Thursday, Nov. 20, 1828.

Mr. Turner of Feliciana, in the name of the Committee of Reclamations, reported that the committee had examined the papers concerning the reclamation made in the name of the widow and heirs of a former representative, for the indemnity milage accorded by the State to each representative, amounting in this case to 172 dollars. He stated that the committee were of opinion that the reclamation was just ; consequently the house adopted the report : second reading to-morrow.

A member of Orleans presented a bill relative to the introduction of slaves in this State : second reading to-morrow.

A Member from East-Baton-Rouge announced that he would shortly introduce a bill relating to the bayous Montesano and Grassy, in the parish which he represents.

Mr. Landry, proposed a resolution having for object to authorise the Governor to provide accommodations for the sitting of the Legislature in the town of Donaldsonville, by the third Monday in December next The second reading of this bill to-morrow,

A Member from East Baton-Rouge proposed a resolution to authorise a Lottery in aid of the Church of St. Joseph in that parish.

Mr. Turner reported in the name of the committee to whom had been referred, a bill relative to the emancipation of Nathaniel Evans : second reading of his bill to-morrow.

A Member from Rapides, proposed a bill having for object to oblige the Clerk of the House to furnish each day a copy of the proceedings of the House to the State Printer. Upon the observation of the Clerk on the impossibility of so doing, for the reason that the Journal must be sanctioned by the House the day after it is written, resolved, That a copy of the proceedings be furnished to the Printer in time to be published the day after it has been sanctioned.

The Speaker has appointed different committees to take into consideration several resolutions presented by a member of Lafourche, which we have published in our paper of yesterday.

Mr. Waggaman gave notice that he will shortly introduce a bill for the purpose of preventing for the future, the turning out of any of the revenues of this State.

The Speaker communicated to the House, a letter from Mr. Gibson, State Printer, wherein he exculpates himself from any blame in not publishing the last two sittings, he being unable to procure the Journal. He appeals for the correctness of his statement to Mr. Canonge, Clerk of the House, and also to other persons employed in the Legislature.

A Clerk employed during last session claimed the pay due him. This claim was admitted.

The House adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

MADAME BONPLAND.

One of the most romantic enterprises of modern times is the search undertaken by Madam Bonpland for her husband, the celebrated naturalist, and the illustrious associate of Humboldt in those researches which have shed so much light upon the operations of nature upon that most magnificent theatre of her's, the tropical regions of America. The strict jealousy with which Dr. Francia, the Dictator of Paraguay, guards the singular republic over which he reigns from the observation of the rest of the world is well known. No stranger who visits it is willingly permitted to return, to carry back the story of what he has seen. Bonpland in passing his botanical researches penetrated into its territories, which offered an extensive and inviting field for the study of his favorite science. Of course he was detained by Dr. Francia who has taken some pains, it seems, to convince the world, through the Brazil press, that he remains there by choice and not by compulsion. In the meantime, all solicitations to procure his release have been fruitless. The government of Buenos Ayres and the Emperor of Brazil, with several of the European governments, are said to have interested themselves in his behalf, but without effect. Madame Bonpland has now undertaken to join him in that distant and little-known country, and, if she cannot effect his release, to share his captivity. What her husband has done for fame, and even more, this lady has done for affection. A London paper gives the following account of her voyage and perilous journey, so far as is known :

Madame Bonpland directed her voyage, in the first instance, to Rio de Janeiro ; but, on her arrival there found the young Emperor had it not in his power to assist her romantic enterprise, having already failed in his repeated efforts in favor of her husband. She accordingly left Rio in a French storeship, and after a most tempestuous voyage arrived in Chili, where she remained several weeks, during which time, she received every attention from the British merchants and residents, and in particular from Captain Juby, of his Majesty's ship Volage. Upon her embarkation for Peru she encountered a repetition of misfortunes in the loss of her trinket box, containing jewels to a considerable amount—a loss, in her circumstances, she was little able to sustain. Nothing, however, could damp the ardour of this extraordinary woman. She arrived at Lima, and took up her above in the house of an English merchant to whom she was recommended. From thence, notwithstanding the strong remonstrances of her friends, she set off for Upper Peru, determined to prosecute her undertaking. Marshall Sucre, President of that republic, accorded her his protection, and manifested the greatest interest in her welfare. Subsequently she set off from Arica and Tacna, to traverse those immense wilds, hitherto unexplored by civilized man, but little known even to the native Indians, which separate the two countries. She was accompanied by a little black slave only, of 14 years of age. The next account of the chivalrous undertaking of this heroic woman will be looked for with the greatest interest by all lovers of science and the arts, to whom this brief account of her progress hitherto cannot fail to prove highly interesting."

Curious Proclamation.—In 1547, a proclamation was issued by Henry the 8th, that "women should not meet together to babble and talk, and that all men should keep their wives in their houses.

Economy!—The Editor of the 'Baltimore American Farmer,' says that a gentleman mentioned a fact to him the other day, to convey an idea of the habits and condition of a certain neighborhood he said, he met on the road, going to a neighboring village, an old fashioned imported coach, drawn by two half starved horses, driven by a one eyed negro slave, conveying a live hog, to buy a jug of rum!

Natchitoches, Oct 6.

By some late news received from Europe, we learn that Col. Milam, has made sale of his Texas claims to the house of the Barings of London. We are convinced now from Prima facie evidence that "labor omnia vincit," for it is truly exemplified in this gentleman.

Crim. Con. in England.—Before the Secondaries office, Aug. 20.

Hester, Esquire, Nares. The damages were laid at 10,000*l*. The plaintiff resided at Southhurst in Kent—his age was about 67 ; his frail wife's about 35, and of considerable personal attraction The defendant was only 22, was a lieutenant in the East India Company's service at Bengal, from which place he had recently returned. After the lady had eloped she went over to the continent with her paramour.—The adultery being proved, the Jury assessed the damages at 1,000*l*.

FROM FITZ-STEPHEN.

London in the Time of Henry II

"The city was then bounded on the land-side by a high and spacious wall, furnished with turrets, and seven double gates, and had in the east part "a tower real fine," and in the west two castles well fortified. Further westwards, about two miles, on the banks of the river, was the royal palace, (at West-minster,) "an incomparable structure," guarded by a wall and bulwarks. Between this city was a continued suburb, mingled with large and beautiful gardens and orchards belonging to the citizens, who were themselves every where known, and respected above all others, for their "civil demeanour, their goodly apparel, their table, and their discourse." The number of conventual churches in the city and its suburbs was thirteen, besides one hundred and twenty-six "lesser parochial ones." On the north side were open meadow and pasture lands, and beyond, a great forest; in whose woodly coverts lurked "the stag, the hind, the wild boar, and the bull." With the three principal churches were connected, by "privilege and ancient dignity," three "famous schools," and other schools had been established in different parts; upon holydays the scholars, "flocking together about the church where the master hath his above," were accustomed to argue on different subjects and to exercise their abilities in oratorical discourses. The handicraftsmen, the venders of wares, and the labourers for hire, were every morning to be found at their distinct and appropriated places as is still common in the bazars of the east; on the river's bank was a public cookery and eating place, belonging to the city, where whatsoever multitude," and however daintily inclined, might be supplied with proper fare. Without one of the gates also, in a certain plain field (Smithfield) on every Friday unless it be a solemn festival, was "a great market for horses, whiter cards, barons, knight, and citizens, repair to see and to purchase." To this city merchants bring their wares from every nation under heaven. The Arabian sends his gold; the Sabeans, spice frankincense; the Scythians, armour, Babylon, its oil; Egypt, precious stones; India, purple vestments: Norway and Russia, furs, sables and ambergris; an (Gaul its wine."
