In addiformity with the constitutional requirement, the Senate assembled to day in the hall of their deliberations, and at about 11 o'clock M. were organized. On motion of Mr. Davidson, of Livingston, who called Mr. Dupre, of Opelousas, to preside as President of the Senate pro tem. Mr. Dupre having taken the chair:

Mr. Walker, of Rapides, suggested to the Senate whether it would not be proper without any further action to adjourn until to morrow. He made this suggestion in consequence of the absence of several of his colleagues that entertained some doubts as to whether the Senate could transact any business on a day which was declared by law a public festival, and upon which all public business was suspended.

The Senate having assembled, had complied with the article of the constitution, that had fixed this as the day of their annual meeting, and as to day was a holiday, it was not as regarded the transaction of all business, he would be pleased to ascertain the sense of the Senate as to the propriety of suspending the election of officers, and adjourning until to morrow. As regarded himself he had no particular wish upon the subject. He made this suggestion at the instance of some of his colleagues, and he thought that as some doubts were entertained by them as to the propriety of any proceedings, and in as much as the House of Representatives had already adjourned, it would be as well to adjourn.

Mr. Hoa said that he had examined the question which had just been raised, but it was his impression that the Senate were perfectly competent to organize themselves by electing their officers. It was true that there was a law inhibiting all judicial proceedings to day, but he did not consider that law as applying to the organization of the Legislature. The constitution had appointed this as the day of meeting for the general assembly of the State: it was explicit and imperative for them to assemble to-day, so long as the Legislature should be in operation, and by a law passed last session no other period, and by a law passed in conformity with the constitution, it was provided that the general assembly should convene this day for the exercise of their legislative functions. He could not conceive how the law inhibiting judicial proceedings could apply to the meeting, and the organization of the Legislature when the constitution and a law passed in consonance therewith required their convocation and consequent organization to day, in the most explicit manner. For himself he considered it within the competency of the Senate to elect their officers to day, although it was a holiday, and he could not comprehend how their action could be controlled in that respect by the law enacted. Mr. Walker had himself, no doubt as to the right of the Senate fully to organize themselves to day, but he considered that, as the Senate had met, the constitutional requirement was fulfilled and that the election of officers might well enough be postponed. He made the suggestion at the instance of some of his colleagues; it was a matter of no material moment whether the officers of the Senate were elected to-day or to-morrow, and that influenced him in his willingness to postpone any further action on the part of the Senate, the day being appropriated to a holiday, and he could not comprehend how their action could be controlled in that respect by the law enacted.
