The Old Story.

A Southern Locofoco sheet, groaning in spirit over the discomfiture of its party, favors its readers with a rehash of the vile slanders heaped upon Michigan Free-soil during the recent canvass, and expresses its astonishment and mortification at the suicidal course which it thinks the South has pursued. We have had something too much of this sickening cant, and at a high time for it to cease. The people of the South voted for MILLARD FILLMORE with a full and absolute knowledge of all that he had ever said and done. They knew that in the [illegible] the purity and nobleness of his character, that never had placed him a party machine, that Locofocoism could do nothing but [illegible] the Republican ticket. They knew too that MILLARD FILLMORE had been made the target for an atrocious system of calumny and detraction as ever was levelled at the character of a statesman and a patriot. They assured patriotic to the assertion which Locofocoism cast upon his political career. They counted closely and diligently the entire conduct of Mr. FILLMORE—Force satisfied themselves that he was a sound and safe conservative—that he was a double friend between Northern man with Southern principles, a Northern man with broad National views. They examined themselves that MILLARD FILLMORE—not as the Locofoco sheet imagines, as a matter of necessity, but because they could not dissociate his name from Gen. TAYLOR's—but with pride, pleasure and entire confidence in the man. They gave him as warm and vigorous a support as Gen. TAYLOR himself, and we for one, believe it most injuriously to the honor, ability, [illegible] and conservative views of Mr. FILLMORE to suppose that support.

Nothing can be more supremely degrading to the character of the Locofoco party on all parts of things the South and bewailing the intuitions of the South in standing by MILLARD FILLMORE. It is disgusting, because it is hypocritical and it is doubly disingenuous and wrong because Locofocoism knows, as know its [illegible] lamentations are all worthless as a [illegible]. We care not to revive the issues of [illegible] for review for the twentieth time the political character of Gen. Cass and the [illegible] upon the Slavery question. Yet it is not a candid plan in the Locofoco sheet to [illegible] that gentlemen and Whigs [illegible] the entire [illegible] of Gen. Cass and Mr. FILLMORE, [illegible] the [illegible] of the Northern and Southern [illegible] Northern man with Southern principles, a Northern man with broad National views. They examined themselves that Mr. FILLMORE had been traduced and vilified, [illegible] and arrangements guished, his acts misrepresented and perverted, and they saw that a [illegible] had been made at him, simply and solely because Gen. TAYLOR himself was utterly [illegible]. The people of the South, therefore, sustained
