MR. CALHOUN'S SPEECH.

The Charles [illegible] of the 7th, contains the speech of Mr. Calhoun, read before U. S. Senate on the 4th, by Mr. Mason. But for the pressure of other matters, we would republish this speech entire, as it is one of his masterpieces, and the ablest South Carolina. We shall endeavor, however, [illegible] before our readers a [illegible] synopsis of its remarks.

Philosophic [illegible] is not the characteristic excellence of Mr. Calhoun's oratory. It is eminently terse, energetic and sentencious. Thought follows thought with a rapidity that almost disables the mind from pausing the task of examining which comment on them, and language is compressed to the utmost [illegible] of condensation. It is a hard, and will already have been through many of its operations which it embraces, great man to do justice to [illegible] speech, as it was to carry out its principles.

Mr. Calhoun [illegible] the announcement of his [illegible] in a speech of [illegible] will not prevent his [illegible] measure, [illegible] Union. He says that the dangers which [illegible] that the [illegible] however, [illegible] We must have an [illegible] which [illegible] Union is enjoying [illegible] The same cause [illegible] the universal discontent [illegible] the Southern States [illegible] Union.
