THE BOSTON OUTRAGE.

The President's proclamation appears in the Washington papers. It receives warm praise from the Republic and Intelligencer, while the Union gives it conditional commendation, remarking that it is well enough in its way, but must be followed up by more active demonstrations. The document itself had not reached Boston at the date of our accounts by mail. In that city, there existed an evident and irrepressible uneasiness at the flagrant nullification of a law of Congress. The public functionaries who have been charged by Mr. RILEY, the Deputy Marshal, with the guilt of collusion, or with criminal neglect and indifference, are exceedingly anxious to free themselves from these imputations. Mayor BIGELOW has come out in a card in reply to Mr. RILEY. We insert it, with a view to give the Mayor the benefit of his excuse, though there is the shadow of a doubt on our mind, that Mr. BIGELOW was anxious for the liberation of the slave, and would not, under any circumstances, have stirred a finger to prevent it. His card is as unemphatic, and equivocating as possible:

I feel it my duty to notice publicly a deposition of the Acting U. S. Marshal, which appeared in the morning papers.

On Saturday last, between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock, Mr. Riley came to my office in the City Hall, and said to me—"We have got a negro, and I thought I would call and let you know." I received the information as a kindly intended hint to look out for street disturbances. He made no request whatever for assistance, nor did he intimate in any way that he wanted any, nor that he had any apprehension of a rescue. After few unimportant remarks, he retired. I immediately ordered the Marshal to use every exertion to preserve order and to prevent disturbance, if possible, and directed him to confer with the officers of the police, who were in charge of the streets, while getting the prisoner into the building. I remained in my office for an hour and a half, after giving these directions, but received no further communication on the subject from any one. The Deputy, with whom I am well acquainted, has never been called upon to act in the Courts of the State or United States, and, as I have already stated, no request was made to me for such assistance in the present case. Knowing that the Marshal of the United States has sworn officers, under him, he is the proper person to apply for assistance in any dangerous case, and I have seen many individuals, as he now knows, who have acted officially under the Governor of this State, and who have sworn and received their pay from Mr. Russell, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and Mr. Rey, the Sergeant-at-Arms, who have never been called upon to act in any case whatever.
