Letter of Mr. Johnston, of Louisiana, to the Secretary of the Treasury, in ropey to his Circular of the 1st July, 1830, relative to the culture of the Sugar Cane. WASHINGTON, Dec. 31, 1830. Sin :- You will receive from different indiriduals in Louisians, actisfactory answers to the interrogatories in your circular of the 1st of July 1830. I beg leave to present some general remarks upon the subjects to which they relate. When Louisiana was acquired by the United States, there was a duty on brown sugar of two and a half cents a pound, levied for revenue.— The people of that State, who had already made some experiments in the culture of the cane, saw that the duty afforded them some protection from foreign competition, and secured the benefit of the home market, which was then of considerable extent, and rapidly increasing.

induced them within the region then considered adapted to the cane; to turn their attention to the production of sugar. They embarked their whole fortunes, and for a long time struggled. under fery discouraging circumstances, uguist the effects of the climate, the vicissitudes of sonsons, the deficiency of capital, the want of skill and all the difficulties incident to the commencement of such an enterprise. It was for many years a doubtful experiment and hezardous undertaking, but they persevered.

The cane gradually adapted itself to the climate.

Different kinds of cane were introduced; skill was acquired by experience, capital increased, machinery and steam power applied, improvements adopted, and expenses diminished. At the close of the war, Congress, for the purpose of increasing the revenue, and of protecting the domestic industry, increased the rate of duty on sugar half a cent a pound, as a part of a general system. This had a most decisive officer in bringing this great national interest to its pres-ent sinte, and they have now finally triumphed over every obstacle.

It was more than twenty years before they could produce 40,000 hogsheads; and during the greater part of that time very little profit was made upon the capital employed.

There are as many slaves now engaged in corton and tobacco as supply the general market of the world. The natural increase of those emplayed in these objects will supply the increase deconsumption. There will be no demand, therefore, for more labor for these purposes. These articles are now very low, and leave only a small profit, and would not afford helf the present price of slaves, if, indeed, there could be any demand for them. And if the surplus slaves, with their increase, were thrown from these two staple articles, which now constitute the chief dependence of the South, and the principal of the state of the South, and the principal of the state of pal export of the United States, the quantity would be greatly increased, and the price greatty reduced below its present reduced price, and the whole value of the slave property would be sunk. It is, therefore, easy for each of the Southern States to calculate the vities of the property they have at stake.

The present price of sugar, at by conte, is susthined by a duty of 3 cents a pound. If that duty was removed, foreign sugar would be sold
