General Santa Anna and Bustamente, were expected to arrive on the 3rd, accompanied by the president Pedraza. The public demonstration of joy and the congratulation with which were to be hailed, the worthy chief who have so valiantly fought for the constitution and the laws, are a most evident proof of the honesty of their conduct, and the sworn sympathies of public opinion in their favor.

After a severe and rather lengthy struggle, the Mexican people have now, the reward of their noble perseverance. The constitution triumphs, the reign of the law is restored; these elements of order and prosperity cannot fail bearing their fruits.

The Mexicans ought never to forget the lesson they have just received.Bustamente, a man of honor and great private worth, became a tyrant after he was invested with the supreme power. Let them, therefore, be more cautious in their political preference. Let them commit their liberties to none but those who are not to be mastered by party spirit, or dazzled by success.

EXTRAORDINARY EXPRESS FROM PARIS, OPENING OF THE CHAMBERS.

We have received the Paris morning papers of Monday and the Nouvellistes on Monday evening. We give from the latter an account of the opening of the legislative session, together with the speech delivered by the king on that occasion:—

A crowd assembled at an early hour in the neighbourhood of the Chamber of Deputies. The doors were opened at 11 o'clock, immediately after which the tribunes were entirely filled. At 2 o'clock the firing of cannon announced the approach of the king. The deputation went out to meet him.

The Queen, accompanied by her two children and Madame Adelaide, came into the tribune which had been reserved for her.

The king entered the Chamber immediately afterwards. He wore the uniform of the National Guard.
