SENATORS VANCE AND GOLDTHWAITE WILL THEY BE ADMITTED?

Governor Zebulon Vance, of North Carolina, and Judge Goldthwaite, of Alabama, have been elected Senators in Congress from their respective States. Their admission or rejection by Congress will test the present temper of Republican leaders towards the people of the Southern States. By the action of Congress in those cases, we shall know how real progress has been made during the last twelve months towards the reunion of the Southern people to their rights as members of the Federal Congress. Our representatives selected by themselves, are unwilling to hazard a confident opinion as to the result. Certainly two men could not have been elected Senators, Vance and Goldthwaite, but for a good men that the Republican Congress desire to see in Congress. The qualification which Southern Representatives must have, before they can be received at Washington, is fidelity to the measures of the Republican party which have reduced the States of the South to the condition of conquered provinces. This qualification we are not willing to believe is possessed by either Governor Vance or Mr. Goldthwaite. They are probable to give in their adhesion to those so destructive of civil liberty and subversive of the fundamental laws of country. And if they were to profess belief in the binding character of the amendments to the Constitution, the views of the dominant party would be a credit to the sincerity of a change so remarkable as that would be in the views of such men as these two new Senators.

The antecedents of Messrs. Vance and Goldthwaite do not lead us to doubt their unchangeable attachment to Constitutional doctrines of the Union. The former has some experience in public life, and we believe he has always been regarded as a man of manlike views and of fixed principles. He has never been reckoned a mere politician who shapes his opinions to suit the circumstances surrounding him. Governor Vance is a man of ability and integrity. He is a man is not wanted at Washington now. Judge Goldthwaite is a man of equally high character as a jurist as Vance in his state, who has devoted a portion of many years to the study and practice of law in the higher courts, decided all political ethics. He also has sound principles which never bow to considerations of expediency. In other words, he enjoys the reputation of being an honest man. That he has consented to accept the position of Senator in Congress is greatly to his credit, although we have much doubt as to his being admitted. Judge Goldthwaite's point of legal qualification, moreover, is not of the highest order. Some of the ablest lawyers in the Confederacy, can be urged against him, that he may not help him any. It is in every case that the absence of qualifications or the removal of those that exist, makes the party acceptable to the Radical majority in Congress. Some of the ablest Union men, who held office under the Confederacy, can be urged against him, that he may not help him any.
