THINGS IN NEW-ORLEANS.

I go every where, for I want to see every thing—from the graves to the gambling houses. Of the last I had heard much—and with amother Portland friend, of whom there are not a few here, I began a partol about 3 o'clock, P. M. Wherever we heard the clink of dollars, we went in. Some played routette, which is an indescribable, because to me an inconvenientially same—and some played routette, which is an indescribable, because to me an inconvenientially same—and some player fare or in the played routette, which is an indescribable, seekinst to me an incomprehensible game—and some playing fare, or in the phate, or fare banks—I am not versed in the ctymology or proper terms. We went into five or six. Some were in the streets with only intervening Venetian blinds. A few were up stairs. Indeed "mailton aloner"—gambling house, with proper directions, is posted up holdly on the corners of many a stoot. I am field there are eight of these gambling house, and the these are eight of these gambling houses.

The London Globe of the 221, on that subject, states that the B figian papers received to day contain the note of the B figian papers received to day contain the note of many a stoot. I am teld there are eight of these generated Palmerston and M. Talleyrand presented to M. Agony.

I have never seen in an American theatrs so much propriety of conduct, and good behavior as I winessed here. The pit was quiet and respectable. The boxes were crowded with pretiness and fashion—and though every F each due win pretuness and fashion—and though every F ench man talks with all his might and main, yet all was order, all propriety, and presented thus far, a spectacle worthy of institution to American insingers.
