THE CAUSE OF LIBERTY.
The condition of England presents one of the most interesting problems in the world. As far as we can read the seasons, they abound with sisns of the control of the sating problems in the world. As far as we can read the heavens, they abound with signs of "changes, perplaying usosarcia" and their minions. The reform till has infused mere of the popular feeling into the house of commonstant only prepares the way for new reforms, or for attempts to obtain them. The church bill, the motion to repeal the corn laws, and the general tone of the public prints and parliamentary discussions, show that the tide of innovation as setting in to wash away many of the old establishments of the country.

se setting in to wash away many of the old country.

The spirit of the age itself demands reform. Labor and capital are in search of new investments. As society improves; as the country begins to swarm with population; and labor-syving machines multiply the effects of labor to swindefinite extent; what should be done? New employan indefinite extent, what should be done? New employ-ments ought to be opened. The artificial restrictions im-posed by positive institutions ought to be relazed or entire-ly removed. Government ought more and more to ap-prosed the great purposes of its original destination, viz. to protect the country from foreign aggressions; and at home, to keep one man from injuring amother in life, imp, and es-tate; and securing to each the fruits of his labor, without transhelling its direction. There ought to be an elastic principle in society, which may accommodate itself to the tsterand securing to each the fruits of his labor, without traspholling its direction. There ought to be an elastic principle in society, which may accommodate itself to the great body of the people. Now, England is precisely in this condition. Her labor and capital require new employments. But her industry continues to be transpelled by numerous restrictions. The corn laws still grind the poor laborer, who is frequently sent ampreciess to bed. Even

For our part we can say to "a betting Dawsonist" that we should not he at all surprised to see the Sultan a candidate for mayor as well as for governor; and we feel almost quite sure that if the election for the presidency of the United States was to take phose three months after that of governor, he would have the presidency of the United States was to take phose three months after that of governor, he would have the presimption to be also a candidate for it; for it will be recollected that shortly after his election of recorder of mortgages, being repulsed in his attempt to obtain that by the governor, he disortly after his attempt to obtain that by the governor, he issently after his attempt to obtain that by the governor, he issently after his attempt to obtain that by the governor, he issently afterwards tried to be effected a cashier of a bank, but he missed it too. The French Chambers were prorogued at the close of the month of June, without any speech from the throne. It is maintained by the opposition papers that a dissolution of the Chamber of Deputies must ensue, for although the Chamber has not been in existence the full period allowed by the Charter, still having twice voted two ordgets in one year, and the Charter not contemplating more than one should be granted to the Government during that period of time, the spirit and meaning of the Charter require new elections should take place. The subject of the fortifications of Paris likewise one which continues to excite general attention in France.

The prorogation of the British Parliament is believed to be not far distant, unless a collision should take place between the two Houses, which now seems less probable. There are still four or five important measure, however, pending sefore them, and the situation of these is thus described in one of the late papers:

"The Church Temporalities (Ireland) Bill has not yet passed the Lower House. Mg.
