LINES WRITTEN IN AN ALBUM. (For the Bos.)

Where shall the exile lay his weary head?
Where shall he fly to theer a heart oppressed,
Within whose cove foud hope is all but dead,
And black despoir arrays his gloomy crest?

Alas I I've reasted through many a telesome scene,— Through many a distant clime I've held my way, To find a spot when nought might interese, Linked with the pang which forced me first to stray

But valo has proved the long and cheerless chase Sill, so I go, more distant seems the gool, That igned one on with hopes of blindis peace, To wond this weary world from pole to pole.

Ah I me, there seems but one assuaging belm,
For all the darkling thoughts that round me cling.
One sunlit vale arrayed in endless calm,
Where peaceful hope yet plumes her dewny wing.

In mean food heart pecides that blissful pert.
On some feath bears storps that rubin blest,—
Then great me, Henren, when fete has cound to
Angail her storms one o'er, amb places o' rest!
