Aim. Dalman. - Ha performs sometimes very well indeed, and then again quite had. To judge from no one parts that have personated, way would say that attention and time may make an actor of him. He appears easy upon the sage, and is correct in his roll; but he is extraordinarily circless in his apparel and appearance. Now nothing adds better to the acting of a part than the looking of it. We know hem to he ayoning main of good sense, and hope a word to the wise will be sufficient.

word to the wise will be sufficient.

Mr. Bristow — There is a great deal of originality and drivness in his acting—he frequently wins your appliance and you cannot tell particularly why—he is quaint and doll, and bus an irresist bie "funny way" with him. He had a great adt, which he is every day mending, of drawling out some of his words. We know not how long this gentleman has been upon the stage, but we think he will make an excellent for concettan, such we believe is the term for those who person its such characters as he generally appears in. Mr. Hessurs, —This gentleman has performed but unnor characters, and, therefore, it is impossible to make any just remarks concerning him. He has a prepossessing figure and a fine face, but we are afried he lacks energy.

Messrs, Corri, Manly, Carr, and Brace, Ho very well, when kept in their place.

We have thus scanned the merits and demerits of each record and actress, and we succeed believe that Messrs.
Rusself of Rowe's stock company is as good as any other in the United States; and, when joined with the frequent 'stars' that have illumined our stage, present us with as complete an historic treat as an epicure can destre.

From the New-York Courier and Enquirer. Now British and French Ministries.—The lare sudden non-serial changes in England and France, are principally densiting to the people of the United States, as they may deat the foreign policy of the two former powers. Whatas the stang to the people of the United States, as they may asker the toreign policy of the two former powers. Whatever may be their operation on their domestic pole y, it can only be a consequence to us in proportion as we take an interest in the colargement of the general rights of mankind. But in these days, when commerce makes neighbors of the most distant nations, and involves their interests in one common system, the foreign policy of every power becomes an object of interest to all the others. Changes of mansiry which may involve a change in this policis, are, therefore, deserving of the attention of our people, as well as our relets.

The new cabinet of England is what is called a Tory ministry. Its two principal members are the Duke of Wellington and Sir Robert Peel. It is generally understood that its formation was cornaited to the Duke. He is known to be opposed to the great system of reform in England, and Sir Robert Peel belongs to the same conservative party. The probability, therefore, is, that the new ministry will on unpopular, and if the House of Commons really represents the people of England, they will scarcely be able to systam themselves long in power. But this would be of listle consequence to us, as the policy of both the William. Consequence to us, as the policy of both the Whig and instead consequence to us, as the policy of both the Whitz arid.

Tory Munsters has not materially varied towards this courtly. There is, however, another view in which the fate chinges may materially affect the United States.

It is known that the former cabinet of England, when the Disk of We lington presided, was opposed to the policy of the Wongs in relation to France and Portigral, if not to Spini. The question of most interest to the United States, is, whether it will persevere in the Whitz policy or revive its own. In the former case, the late changes will not materially affect this country; in the latter, they probably will.

Show'd England wi hidraw from her intunate triendly relations with France, and incline to co-operate, as she probably will, with the great northern confederacy, the present king of the French will be placed in a most critical position. It is quite evident that the people of France keve little, if any, affection either for his person or government. They are disappointed in the henefits they expected to derive from a change of dynasty, and nothing but a feeting of national innor vill, we think, rouse them to the defence of a monarch who, ever since his accession to the throne, has been decaming in their estimation. It is not amprobable that the nation wand refuse a vibintage submission to all the perils and submission to all the perils of an animal, which from the defence of a monarch with the submission to all the perils of the Mississippi, on the west side, and near the nation wand refuse a vibintage submission to all the perils of the bones of an animal, which from the defence of a monarch with the montion wand refuse a vibintage submission to all the perils of the montion of an animal, which from the defence of a monarch with the submission to all the perils of the montion of an animal, which from the defence of a monarch with the submission to all the perils of the montion of an animal, which from the defence of a monarch with the submission to all the perils of the montion of a

IMPORTANT ADMISSION.

The Bank presses have been publishing the remarks of Mr. Tyler, in answer to Mr. Benton, on the report of the Senate's committee for investigating the affairs of the U. S. Bank. This, they have asserted again and again, be be a complete refutation of every thing said by Mr. Benton; and have represented the Western Senator as cowering under the rebuke he had received from the southern champien of the bank. Now we have read these remarks of Mr. Tyler, as reported by the National I telligencer, with considerable care, and so far from being a refutation of Mr. Banton's statements, they actually contain admissions of some of the latements, they actual'y contain admissions of some of the most important positions taken by him. If the speech of Mr. Tyler is a triumph for the Bank, it must be understood as a mig victory, such as was achieved in North Carolina as a mig victory, such as was activised in North Circlina Missouri, Illinois, A.abama, &c.—Wilmington (Del.) Likeness of Forrest in the Gharacter of Spartactus.—Perhaps no single person, of the many thousands who have write sed with desight Mr. Forrest's noble pessonation of the Thracian Gladiator, will ever lorget the exceedingly striking and impressive manner in which his penforms the scene in the amphitheatre, and in particular, the thrilling effect which he gives to those few words—Let them come in, we are armed? We have never heard these wonderful power of the actor by repeated bursts of applause. The tones of his voice, the expression of his countenance, his attitude, every thing contributes to the effect; and an artist who should take them at the moment, and accurately transfer his manly and expressive lineaments and noble figure to the canvass, would make a picture-more interesting than the Hamilet of Sir Thomas Lawrence, or Hogarith's representation of Garrick in King Rithard. This difficult but admirable subject has lately been attempted by Wilham Page, an artist of our city, of the productions of whose pensional difficulties of the engraving is of a very large size, and is executed with a great deal of boidness and effect. "Remember, brethen, that those who die in battle, sup with the Lord," and then wheeled about and was marching off, when Col James Ennis, of Virginia, called to him, and said: "Paison, are you not going to the battle?"
