THE UNION—IT MUST BE PRESERVED.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, DEC. 31, 1834.

The legislatures of the various states are in session, or are on the eve of convening. Our own legislature meets next Monday. The most important business before it will be the election of a senator to the congress of the United States in the place of George A. Waggaman, whose term of service expires on the 4th of March next. It is understood that the present incumbent is a candidate for re-election.

The legislature of Mississippi meet in extra session on the third Monday of January next. The election of a senator to congress in the place of George Poindexter, will take place immediately after its convocation.

SPECIE.

The following is the importation of specie into our port for the year ending this day:

American vessels,	$ 7,731,230 39
Foreign equalized vessels,	149,104 00
Mexican vessels,	1,145,796 14
Spanish do.	217,805 5
	$7,241,035 57

Seven millions two hundred and forty-four thousand and thirty-five dollars and fifty-seven cents.

Nothing can better illustrate the happy operation of the gold bill which passed during the last session of congress so far as we are concerned, than the foregoing estimate.

Facts are stubborn things, to use a hackneyed expression and are worth more than all the declamation in the world. There are a set of politicians, altho' thoroughly convinced of the breadth, truism, who in place of adducing facts submit bold and positive assertion. In this spirit has the gold bill been called a humbug, and the design of giving to the country a metalic currency, been pronounced a wild chimera of the brain. There is no evidence brought forward to substantiate either of those assertions, yet are they daily repeated with a pertinacity exceeded only by the impudence of those by whom they are advanced. On the contrary, there are solid grounds for the belief that the present vile system of paper-money can be totally swept away, together with all the evils with which it is accompanied, and that a bona fide currency can readily be supplied in its place. Can any man look at the heavy importations of specie from abroad and come to a different conclusion? In our city, we find the importations for a single year to be no less a sum than seven millions, two hundred and fifty-four thousand and thirty-five dollars, fifty-seven cents!! The people feel assured of the feasibility of carrying into execution the patriotic intentions of the administration, and it is for that reason they gave the president a support which is so galling to his enemies.

From the Albany Argus.

The leading federal organ in this city (the Evening Journal) declines to "dwell upon the infirmities of the President's Message," because, as it alleges, and truly alleges, (strange as it may seem) "the people have sanctioned the measures of the administration." We commend the discretion and good sense of the federal organ; especially as its approval of the principal topics of the Message, leaves very little to "dwell upon" as "infirmities." For instance, it thus speaks, frankly and pertinently, on the subject of our relations with France:

"In all that relates to our negotiations with France, the President will find a general response from the people.—The history of that negotiation is fairly and forcibly presented, and shows that we have already slept too long upon our wrongs. More than thirty years ago our flag and our commerce were violated. Our claim for redress was fully established, but France first neglected to adjust that claim, and now refuses to fulfil the terms of a solemn treaty!—Would not longer forbearance cease to be a virtue? If we suffer this indignity from one nation, what security—say, what right have we to the respect of others? In a case like this, where the interests of our people and the honor of our government are deeply concerned, but one course is left for us to pursue. Mild means have failed, and a resort to strong ones becomes imperative. France owes us money. She must pay it, peaceably if she will—forcibly if she must."

And thus of the Bank:

"Gen. Jackson may roll up his accusations mountain high against the Bank, for aught we care. We only regret that the Bank should, by its various acts of folly, have enabled a corrupt administration to create a popular delusion against that institution strong enough to conceal all its evil deformities from the public eye. The seizure, for instance, of the government dividends, to pay its trumpery demand for commissions on the protested French draft, not only deserves the full measure of reprobation which it receives in the message, but gives color and plausibility to all the other charges, however unfounded and absurd, that its opponents think proper to prefer. If the claim of the Bank for commissions is valid, there was a legal remedy, without resorting to high-handed measures which could not fail to increase the load of opprobrium under which the institution staggers."

And thus most justly and soundly (mirabile dictu!) of the veto message and the question of internal improvement by the federal government:

"In relation to the subject of national internal improvements, than which there is not a more important and embarrassing question, we think the doctrines of this message decidedly sound and salutary. That these doctrines have not in all cases been carried out into practice by him who professes to entertain them, is not so important as that should be solemnly placed in the archives of the Government. It is unquestionably true, as the President says, that by interposing his veto upon the Maysville Road Bill, he arrested a course of national expenditure which would have proved equally disastrous to the revenues of the country and the harmony of the Union."

We shall now soon these opinions, thus sound and pertinent to the times, and so directly at war with the doctrines and language of the federal associates of the Journal, will be softened down, contradicted and renounced. If, contrary to experience, they are persisted in, we shall not hesitate to be among the first to applaud the act, and to "give the devil his due."

From the Richmond Enquirer.

The Fredericksburg Arena states that the Committee, appointed by the meeting of citizens convened in that town on the 8th ult. to take measures to ascertain the practicability of a Rail Road from Fredericksburg to some point on the Western waters, lost no time in making application to the General Government for the services of a competent Engineer to make a survey of the proposed route. A deputation proceeded to Washington, and were assured by the Secretary of War, that an officer should be detached for the purpose as soon as practicable. It is now announced, in conformity with this assurance, the Secretary has selected Col. S. H. Long, of the U. S. Engineers, to make the survey in question.

The sales of the Public Lands,—according to the official Report of the Commissioner of the General Land office,—are steadily increasing, under the influence of the natural growth of the population, and the tide of immigration which continues to flow to the West and South West. The sales of the year 1833 exceeded those of 1832, 1,393,685 acres, 1,856,909 dollars, of purchase money, and of the money paid into the Treasury [illegible] of 1832, [illegible] of the corresponding quarters of 1833, 390,291 acres, 437,040 dollars of purchase money, and of the amount paid into the Treasury the sum of 856,843 dollars.

It is stated that notwithstanding the additional aid granted last year to the permanent force of the office, the arrears are constantly accumulating. Among the facts adduced to show the necessity of providing by law for a more prompt and efficient discharge of the business of the office, the Commissioner declares that on the first of January next, the office will have issued patents for lands sold, will be not less than 100,000, in which more than 70,000 persons are directly interested as purchasers, and whose rights and conveniences are entitled to the respect and attention of government.—Balt Am.

The appearance of American Cotton Twist in a Manchester factory, furnished at cheaper rate than that afforded by the English cotton works, is a circumstance which could scarcely be expected to be regarded with complacency by John Bull. American ingenuity and enterprise are rapidly establishing the mechanic arts on the firmest basis, and with the present progress of improvement, not many years can elapse before the industry and skill of our country will be found pushing the competition into markets where as yet their productions have never appeared.

From the Manchester (Eng.) Guardian.

AMERICAN COTTON TWIST—DUTY ON RAW COTTON.—We have this week had shown to us a sample of cotton yarn, No 22's Water Twist, spun, as the ticket imports, by Collett & Smith, of the Hamilton factory, Paterson, New Jersey, which was purchased in New York for account of a manufacturing house in this town, and has been laid down here at full 3 half pence per pound less than it could have been bought for in this market. It is only fair to observe that this yarn was probably purchased under the influence of the serious depression which the recent crisis in their monetary and banking system produced in the United States, and that the price of 22's water twist there has of late been decidedly higher than it was for some considerable time previously.—Nevertheless, after making all due allowances on this score, there will remain in the transaction abundant ground for becoming sensible of the great importance of a timely removal of the duty on raw cotton. It may be observed, as a further motive to this step, that cotton yarn imported from the United States is subject to no duty whatsoever. At least the yarn we have seen, after full time for enquiry and consideration had been taken, was passed at the Liverpool custom house without charge.—Bell Am.

SUPERIOR COURT.—The Mercantile Library building: John A Smith and Charles H Town, against the American Insurance Company.

This was a suit to recover damages for losses sustained by perils of the sea; against which defendants had insured the plaintiffs.

It appeared that in the month of October, 1937, the brig Plato, of this port, left Marseilles for this city, having on board a quantity of wine and madder, belonging to the plaintiffs, on which they had effected an insurance to the amount of $15,000. After the Plato had sailed from Marseilles, she encountered a violent storm, during which, so much water got into her hold, that it was found necessary to lighten her, by first throwing overboard the anchors and other articles, and afterwards 8 or 300 casks of wine, which were obliged to be stove in the hold, and rolled out as the wine could not be got out otherwise. A few days after this was effected, she encountered another severe gale and was driven by it, which compelled her to bear off for the island of St. Thomas, where she arrived in the month of January. Here the cargo was taken out and on examining it, it was found that many of the tins which covered the bung holes of the wine casks had become rotten, and many of the casks were found empty.—The wine was all landed and recoopered, and such casks as were found partly empty, were filled up from others, and the entire pot into waters, until the vessel sailed. On the brig's voyage from the Isle of St. Thomas to N York, she struck at the entrance of the latter port, which caused her to leak. When the vessel arrived at this city, the wine which then remained was examined and found to be brackish and otherwise deteriorated in quality, and was delivered over to the Warden of the Port, to be sold for the benefit of whoever was entitled to it. Besides the wine there was a quantity of madder on board belonging to the plaintiffs which was also injured by the action of the salt water upon it. There were also drugs in the hold which threw out a strong vapour and bad odour during the voyage, from which the wine received additional injury from what was done to it by the salt water, and hot climate of St. Thomas, where the vessel was obliged to put into for repairs. For the losses so sustained the plaintiffs laid their damages at about $6000.

The principal grounds of defence were, that any injury the wine received from the hot climate of St. Thomas could not be attributed to the perils of the sea; that there had been no proof to show the quality of the wine, or that it was properly coopered, and also that there had been but a partial examination of it on its arrival here, whereas it should have been minutely examined, and the uninjured portion of it separated from what was damaged before it was sold at auction.

The Court charged the Jury, that though it was admitted on both sides that the wine had been damaged on the voyage, still it was a question as to how far this injury arose from what is termed the dangers of the sea, which included injuries from the winds and waves. The vessel had been driven from her course, and obliged to put into the isle of St Thomas, which was a different climate to what she would have experienced had she come directly home. The question was, did the policy of insurance cover injuries which might have been done the wine by having been landed and re-shipped at that port? Clearly not. Nor did the policy cover any injuries which arose from the wine having been originally of bad quality or not having sufficient strength. The same rule applied from any injuries which it received from the bad odour which arose from the drugs which were in the hold along with it.—The main question then was, what was the injury done to it by the salt water. On the one side it was said that the wine could not have been injured by the salt water without its taste being affected by it. And on the other hand it was alleged that it could be injured, though without the taste of the salt water being perceptible. If the Jury thought the wine had been injured by the salt water, they must then confine their damages to only as much of the wine as was really injured, to ascertain which, the Jury would have some difficulty, and must do it in the best manner they could. The Jury were not to take the result of the sale as the basis of the damages, unless they thought that the amount of injury done the wine could not have been ascertained by taste or smell; but in that case they would give damages according to the amount produced by the sale, as the plaintiffs had clearly a right to sell. If the Jury came to the conclusion that the uninjured portion of the wine could have been separated from the damaged part, then they would ascertain as well as they could, how much of it had been injured, as the Court did not think that if even a considerable portion of the wine had been injured, the plaintiffs had a right to sell it all as damaged wine.—The Jury would then ascertain the amount of damages by comparing the price of sound wine in this port with the price of the damaged wine, and if this was ten per cent, or whatever it might amount to, they would give it to the Plaintiffs with interest. There were two losses certain, The loss on the madder $463, and the loss on the wine thrown over board, which was $1520, and which fell on the defendants.

It appeared that the plaintiffs had effected an insurance on the cargo with two different Insurance Companies.

The Jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff of $5020 95 cents damages.
