Thus far, one of the great objects of the constitution, (an election by the people to their primary colleges, was believed to be guar-ded and secured. But this system was attacked and overthrown in the memorable contest of 1824-5; and the fail-are by the republican party on that occasion to elect its candidate, was followed by the election of a chief magis-trate by the house of representatives, in utter dieregard of the popular will, and under circumstances which produced the deepest excitoment. Indeed, so acrongly impressed was the distinguished individual who was the object of that danger of an election by the house of representatives, instead of the people, could have induced him, in the mo-ment of triumph, to hold such language. What airmoves avonchment of the importance of a clear expression of the popular will, and this defect in our constitution could have been given than this? This election however and the state of things to which it came now the state. of things to which it gave rise, soon roused the people, and the elements of the old republican party rallied around Gen Jackson as the individual in whose person popular rights and power were to be vindicated.
