The following letter was received from the acting mayor.

To the president and members of the city council. Gentleman,
I have the honor to inform you that after a close examination of the levee in front of the meat market, I have found it absolutely necessary that some improvement abould be made for the accommodation of the pirogues of the coasting trade, and the boats of butchers which are moored there. The city surveyor with whom I had a convortation on that subject, has given me to understand that an embankstent might be made with a flight of steps in all the length of the leves in front of the market; which would increase the facilities of discharging the pirogues, and insure them against all casualties. I desire therefore you would sationize such work to be done, according to the plan and undar the superintendance of Mr Pille.

As we are on the topic of the meat market, I will allude to the necessity of raising said market one story higher. This plan has been approved by the city surveyor. I am convinced that such an improvement would greatly contribute to the increase of the retat of said unitatet, and prevent the confusion which always highers when rain or severe weather compels the retailors standing on the banquettes to take refuge inside. For then such retailers would be accommodated in the upper story which would be more convenient for the feeple and themselves. I hepe gentlemen this plan waggested to you, and which I taink of great importance, will deserve your attention.

He then deprecated the longitudinal wharf as being calculated to destroy the port of the central and lower parts of the city.

Mr Caldwell replied. If the improvements required is but to continue an improvement in the port below, then a priori his amendment designess greater or similar consideration, because it is to complete improvements for which appropriations had before been given, and which it is essential to continue lest the beautif of all those up proprietions shall be lost to the corporation. Paris, Oct. 1st 1868.

You will have been already advised that the Regie had seespted all the Virginia Tobacco in Frarres at 161 fper 100 ks. This purchase terminates their system of Concours for their supplies of this article, and bey mean for the future that of adjudication. To this affect they have announced the first for the 15th of November, at which time they propose to contract for about 900 hids. of American Tobacco for their wants of 1895, and as they mean to prohibit or curtail the culture in this country and substitute entirely the use of foreign Tobacco, the demand for this article of the production of your country will regularly increase, and it is probable that in the course of the next few years France will require 15 to 90,000 hids. of American Tobacco instead of 3 to 4,000 as she has been in the habit of taking for the lass five years. The increase of consumption here will have an important influence in the general markets for this article.

[In the plan of the concours it is nocessary the Tobacco should be in France at the time o offering it, but the new plan is to contract, allowing time for the contractor to ge to market and make his purchases afterwards.

The New York Star of Monday contains an interesting article from the pen of Judge of Encheorifie, in relation to the was cargied on in Tesks in 1813-14. The Judge states, that while discharging the duties of Astorrey General of Louisians, he was called upon, in the latter part of 1813, to prosecute fourteen persons at Nachtioches for highway robbery. It appeared that a band of shout fifty, who were outlaws, of the meat dering that desperate character, had stationed themastives on the Sabine, for the purpose of interceptimizathe caravine angaged in the growing trade between Natchisteches and the internel provinces of New Spein.—They had become so formidable, that it was necessary to detack, a military force from the garrison of Natchisteches. This was placed under the command of Lient Magee, a young officer of twenty three or four years of upon of great promise, and of a fine manly person—The duty sasigned him was attended with complete success—he broke up the gang, brought in the culpritis before mentioned, thiled a number of others, and dispersed the rest. While engaged in this perilous enterprise, Magee conceived the bold idea of the conquest of Magee repaired to New Orleans, where he obtained one supplies, and engaged a number of purtiannel among them several young men of respectable standing and character. Here he found also a native of the internal provinces, Bernardo, who had fed in coefficient of having taken part in the revolution attempted by Hidelgo. As it would not have done is have entered New Spain as jam invader, it was deemediscilic to use the name dellernarde as general of the dispetiment in spanish in the name of Bernardo, calling on the Relations to join his standard. The merceatry of using the name of a Spanish American, was perhaps the cuses of their mistoriuses; a certain degree of power was unavoidably attached to the nominal exercise of authority, and that was aufficient to ruin the eases. The Americana, in the struggle which appears now about to begin, are in a very different situation. They have a foot hold, have a powerful faces at their command, and may count upon assessment to a thousand times agresser extent, than at the period of the first way of Texas. It is true, they have to contend with libels more accustomed to arms than the Mexican Spaniards at that period; but there is nothing among them tellumpers with the deadly rifle; no one who is not injusting at the period; but there is nothing among them telluminated with the formidable nature of this weapon in American hands, on such a theatre of action, can form any just idea of it. There is also an immeasurable superiority in the moral qualifies of our people, over the half barbarous, and debased population of those confutnees. There is also another consideration which must be taken into view, the whole of the internal previnces are ripe for revole, and, perhaps, the greater part even of the states nearer the capital, are ready to join any party which promises to put down St Anna and his usurpations. I should not be surprised if the war in Thans would end in the city of Maxion."

at is the twenty-pouts estag, 1543. On that day,—he effect no doubt of the intense excitement of his mind, operating upon an exhausted frame.—an effection of blood brings him to the gates of the grave. His last boug has come; he lies stretched upon the couch, from which is will never rise, in his apartment at the Canonary at Frauentiner, East Prussts. The hearns of the setting was glands through the gothic windows of his chamber; near his bedside is the armillary sphere, which he has contrived to represent his theory of the heavens,—his picture peinted by himself, he amusement of his cartier years, hangs before him: beneath it his astrolabe and other imperfect astronomical instruments; and around him are gathered his sornowing disciples. The door of the apartment opens,—the eye of the departing sage is turned to see who enters; it is a friend, who bings him the first printed copy of his immortal treates. He knows that in that book he contradicts all that had ever been distinctly taught by lormer philosophers;—he knows that he has rebelled against the sway of Ptolemy, which the accentific world had acknowledged for a thousand years;—he knows that the popular raind will be shocked by his innovations—be knows that the attempt will be made to press even religion into the service against him; but he knows that his book is true. He is dying, but he leaves a glorious trade, as his dying bequest to the world. He bids the friend, who has brought it, place himself between the window and his bedside, that the sun's rays may fall upon the precious volume, and he may be bend it once, before his eye grows dim. He looks upon it, bakes it is his fund, presses it to his hreast, and expires. It is his funde, presses it to his hreast, and expires. It is not wholly gone!

A smile lights in his dying countenance; a beam of returning intelligence kindles in his eye;—his lips move—and the friend, who leans ov r him, can hrar him faintly muratur the beautiful sertiment, with all voer

My soul, which springs beyond thy sphere, no more destandability aid.

Ye stars, are but the shining dust of my divine shode, The sarrayed, it hose heavenly enacts, where I shall reign win God.

So died the great Columbus of the heavens. His doctriae, as first, for want of a general diffusion of knewledge, forted its way with diffusity against the desp-rooted prejudiess of the age. Tycho Brake attempted to restore the absurdities of the Ptolemnic systems but Kepler with a segucity which more than atoms for all his strange fancies, laid hold of the theory of Copernicus, with a graup of iron, and dragged it into repute. Galillo turned his telescope to the heavens, and observed the phases of Venus, which Copernicus holdly predicted must be discovered, as his theory appearance; and lastly Newton arose, like a glorious sun, scattering the mists of doubt and opposition, and assertied the heavens full orbed and cloudless, establishing at once his own renown and that of his prodecessors, and crowned with the application of the marked his character, 'I do not know what I may appear to the world; but to myself I seem to have been only like a boy, playing on the sea shore, and diverting myself in finding now and then a pebble or a prettier shell than ordinary, while the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me.'

Hussamas & kronimus.—A newspaper is published at Pesth, and that, too, in the Hungarian language—a prodigious imporation, and one that premises important consequences; for there is no law of censorship in Hungary; and it is not very likely that the dist will sanction may proposition of the kind. There is, basides, an academy at Pesth, somewhat on the plan of the French Institute, which publishes its transactions in a quarterly journal. To that journal, se well as to thenewayspaper, the reformers frequently courribute articles. Written generally for the purpose of correcting some ristional prejudice, or inculosating some wholescome principle of legislation. These articles they sign with their narios, as they are determined to carry on their plans of improvement in the face of day, and upon the same of keeping within the law, which they particle and the same of true science, with just and twy! Bloeral motions of expenditure. His manual one day amnounced to him hat intention to give a supper, and fermanded a méras. The shelp presented himself with his estimate; and the first stricle on which the prince cast his eyes was this: fifty hence—this what with the estimate; and the first stricle on which the prince cast his eyes was this: fifty hence—this what with read are not the less necessary for my equagasis, my blood, my gerniture, my—'Bertrand, you must be out of your acheses: are you going to feast my whole regiment the less of the late assessment of the chambers. was about to burst, lot suddenty, there succeeded a perfect caim.

Two reasons may be assigned for this, the first arising from the character of the French people; the sectord, from the state in which the country has been ever since the revolution of 3830. No people in the world passess, in a greater degree than the French, the happy temperament of submitting, with a good grace, to me will, when they can see no casy mode of avering or removing it. After a lew strugs of the shoulders, and a few see weeks wous, they will forget altogether that any thing violent or unpleasant has occurred to them. Thus it was with the law against the associa-them. Then it was with the law against the associations, and thus it is with the late measures adopted by the chembers.

We have said that the state of the country since the revolution has contributed to produce this feeling. It is a well known fact that the people have been in a state bordering on that of civil war ever since that period. The rational guards, with whom at the present time the supreme power really reades, had become weary of the insecurity and dimensions that prevailed. Any measures, however severes, would have met with their approbation, provided they seemed likely to put an end to such evils, and to relieve them from the painful duty of remaining almost continually forms a breat in defence of the threme and the other metitations of the sourtry.
