Review of the N. York Market.

Saturday, May 13.

During the past three days, the market has assumed a singular appearance for most descriptions of merchandise. The operations of trade do not appear to have been materially quickened, but the downward course of prices has been generally arrested, and an increased inquiry for many of the leading articles indicates a return of confidence, the commencement of which cannot fail to season to impart its wonted activity to the market.

There is still little activity perceptible in the sales of coffee, and with the exception of a few parcels which have been sold by auction, we have reason to hear that any offering of interest has been the subject of but few words, little or no attempt at inquiry for many of the leading articles being made, and
