NEW ORLEANS:

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 21, 1837.

Candidate for Congress.

An individual who signs his name Miles Taylor has published a long address to the citizens of the first congressional district of the state of Louisiana, in the Planter's Advocate of Donaldsonville. We are not personally acquainted with the gentleman, having never before heard of his name. This address is not written with any extraordinary ability, and if we were to judge of his fitness to represent this important commercial and agricultural district in congress from this epistle, we should be obliged to pronounce the opinion that is silent, that does not speak its impartial views, and stands aloof from the busy arena of contest, merits reprobation. No cogent of the people can be esteemed justifiable in excluding from its columns subjects of extreme moment to the people, and more especially in a country characterized for the freedom of its institutions, where the liberty of speech is as universal as that of conscience, and where the conduct of our political magistrates is subject to the unrestricted fiat of even the humblest individual. The press as the great enlightener of the public mind, as the warder of a power more influential than all the imperial diets of despotic governments, should never be trammelled, stamping the elucidation of political theories. Truth is best elicited by investigation, and the collision of intellect which arises from the discussion of party, often illumines an obscure and intricate question with the strongest sparks of light. The very contention by which our liberties are guaranteed to us; that mighty record of our ancestors' wisdom, was explained, examined, analyzed and recommended through the medium of the newspaper essays of three illustrious men; and the violent prejudices which had been conceived by many against that inestimable instrument, were gradually dissipated by the influence of those admirable documents on public opinion. The writings of Junius, that bold and powerful mind, that dared to fulminate its anathemas on the heads of a tyrant ministry, and deluded sovereign, were preserved to the people in the pages of a political journal.—That effort is now void to the reader of history. The right to request subscription lists. Let no conductor of a press then brute of sensibility—it is his bounden duty to take past and let in the affairs of the government through, whose salutary laws he enjoys freedom of thought; language, and action. To be neutral is to be a recreant to the country which possesses him.

The Bulletin.

The colubrine of this paper offer scandalous matter for merriment. On a dull day when neither local nor foreign intelligence can be obtained, when the mails have failed, and the brains of editors are molested for the usual quantum of original matter, a reference to the pages of this journal will seldom prove fruitless. If we look in vain for talent, research, humour, profundity or any other intellectual attributes, we at least find subjects for comment and satire in the fantastic effusions of ignorance and pedantry. In all cases for immediate Election in yesterday's journal, discovering of fine inanimation, this "learned Theban" observes.

"It is enable as a tools. In vain will the machinations of a cunning and intriguing policy endeavor to undermine it, or the brow of power to overturn it, the censure of the tyrant is broken against its granite nature and the tyrant who fails upon it is crushed and destroyed.

This is a specimen of the sublime intellectuality manifesting them the Gem spot of Virginia, the Qu'il chemist of Carondelet.

We imagined that the Bulletin had been taught by the luminous outcomings on his style which have emanated from the many issues of this city, to empty the vials of its wrath upon the heads of those who were guilty of such offences against the sanctity of sense and language, but we find that we have been mistaken, and that the editor of the Bulletin still continues to exhibit specimens of thought and profundity of diction, and a display of ideas amid the jargon of unmeaning phraseology.

The Mint.

The shipping list informs us that the specimens belonging to the U. S. Branch Mint of New Orleans, embarked on the 21st instant, at Philadelphia, on board a vessel bound to this place. Of course they may be daily expected, and the coining of specie will speedily go into operation at the new building on Esplanade street.

New Comedy by Knowles.

Gallagher's Messenger street, an analysis of Sheridan Knowles' new comedy, the Love Chase, which was brought out at the Haymarket Theatre with great success. It is said to be written with considerable energy and spirit in the comic parts. If this be so, the author has preserved himself capable of excelling in a department of the Drama in which hitherto he has signally failed, for his most successful compositions are defaced and spoiled by the introduction of spiritless and lame efforts at comic incident. The plot of the Love Chase has all the essential dramatic power which distinguishes the productions of the delightful writer—the language is animated, terse and elegant, sometimes (a common fault) overcharged, sometimes embellished with all this graces of poetry. The triumph of the piece was complete, the audience bestowing upon it both loud and long continued applause

Fatal Conflict.

Another of those fatal encounters which disgrace the spirit of the age, occurred at Clinton (Ky.) between Judge James, a state senator, and Mr Robert Binford, a candidate for the House of Representatives. Binford, it seems, sought James with an intent to kill, for supposed interference to the prejudice of his election. They finally met in Hall's tavern, when after some altercation, they both drew their pistols and fired. James's ball struck Binford, and killed him immediately, and Binford's shot, missing his opponent, unhappily lodged in the temples of a Mr Collins, a disinterested spectator, who died in a few minutes.

Judge James was arrested, tried, and acquitted, the death of Binford being regarded as an act of justifiable homicide. It appears that Binford was actuated in his attempt on James by unnecessary and causeless malignity—having attempted at one time to shoot him, when surrounded by his family and totally unarmed, and on the day of the encounter entering the tavern with the avowed object of putting an end to the existence of Judge James. The latter was compelled to use his weapon in self defence.

From the New York Journal of Commerce.

LATEST FROM BUENOS AYRES.

By the brig Cedric, Captain Doyle, we have Buenos Ayres papers to Sept 22d.

The army detained to operate against General Santa Cruz, protector of Bolivia and Peru, was nearly ready to march. Its advance guard was at Jujui. It is supposed to be in a high state of discipline and full of enthusiasm.

Private letters from Jujui report on the authority of a respectable individual who arrived on the 18th July in the latter city from Bonpcha that a Bolivian battalion consisting of 600 men (formerly belonging to the army of the late General Suiaverry, had mutinied at Santiago de Cotagaita in Bolivia; killed their Colonel, and were marching towards this Republic.

It was, however, probable, that before arriving on the frontiers, they would be attacked by the Bolivian troops stationed in a number of them from Tupiza, Sauglinas and Talina, under the command of General Brown and Medinaceli, the result of which was hourly expected at Jujui.

It was reported in the government of Jujui was about to send a body of troops to protect the battalion in question.

CHILI.—The execution of the Quillota mutineers took place on the 6th July. The following were the individuals who suffered the awful penalty:—

Ex-Col Jose Antonio, Vidaurre.
Ex-Lieut Col. Jose Antonio Toledo.
Ex-Capt. Santiago Brito.
" " Narciso Carvallo.
" " Raimundo Larrondo.
" " Daniel Forellin.
Ex-Sub Lieut. Candido Ulloa.
Corporal Jose Ponce.

Pursuant to the terms of the sentence of the Court Martial, the head of the culprit Jose A Vidaurre, was placed on a pole in the plaza of Quillota, and the right arm of Santiago Florin was also affixed to another on the spot where he murdered the unfortunate Minister of War Don Diego Portales. Some others of the conspiracy, we believe, had been transported to Juan Fernandez.

The blackness of Vidaurre's crime is severely but justly animadverted on in the Mercurio of Valparaiso. The deceased Minister had been the unsuspecting benefactor, and was so deceived by the repeated assurances of his pardon—a gratuitous, but notwithstanding the warnings he received from his friends, he continued to shelter upon him the traitor.

The expedition from Chili against Gen Santa Cruz was to sail about the 20th August. General Blanco Encalada was to command both the naval and military forces, with the rank of General. Lafuente, Minister of Peru, was to lead the numerous Peruvian emigrants who were to take a part in the enterprise of liberating their country from foreign domination.

BALTIMORE, Nov 21.

A Breach of Promise case was tried in the Baltimore County Court, sitting in this city last week, in which Thomas Wallace, of Baltimore county, was the plaintiff and Dr John Sappington of the same place defendant. The jury yesterday morning rendered a verdict of $5000 damages for the plaintiff.

The new Rotunda is the useful appendage to the commerce of our city is now in full use under for service. She commenced her operations a few days ago by towing the ship Ann M'Kim into the Bay. It is a subject of regret that her commencement cannot an ice boat of greater steam power,—was not undertaken this season. With two boats at command, the communication of this city might be conducted with as much facility in winter as in summer, and we trust that another season will not be permitted to pass without a second boat being provided. The canal to tide water opened, the Rotunda will furnish employment to a new full and profitable employment in towing the canal boats between the city and Havre de Grace.

TRAGICAL HISTORY.—The following tragical history is taken from the Gazette de Tribunaux. Soon after the revolution of 1830, Mlle X., a young lady, rich, beautiful, distinguished by the most brilliant and amiable qualities, was married to Mr. N whose corresponding character promised to ensure the felicity of both. This, however, was not the case; for the bride had murdered her self-contentment, in a family of two years, and so strong was her passion for her first lover, that, notwithstanding she received the most powerful proofs of the affections of her husband, and had twice become a mother, she could not refrain from giving such indications of her uncontrollable feelings, that the object of her preference became alarmed. Dreading some terrible catastrophe, he resolved to separate himself; and the therefore solicited for her, that there be endeavoured to divert his mind by pursuing the study of chemistry and metallurgy, for which that country affords a favourable field. By having transfer with feeling and good sense he explained to Mme. N. the motives of his absence, in renouncing an intercourse which, however intoxicating, he could not enjoy without remorse. His fault, however, instead of being the saving of Mme. N. produced her utter destruction. She became in appearance, after a time of depression, more gay and brilliant in society than ever; and in fact she was accomplishing one of the blackest crimes. M. N——, who had always been in the enjoyment of the most robust health, became subject to vomitings and other complaints, which baffled all the skill and science of physicians in discovering their source, and all the remedies their art suggested. At length, change of air was recommended, and apartments were taken in one of the most distinguished of the suburbs of Paris, in pursuance of which resolution in the centre of the capital afforded, where he was accompanied by his wife, who, to the eyes of the world, proved him with the most tender and unremitting care. No improvement in his health for some time, and, as a last hope, he was removed to breathe his native air in a small town in the department of the Meurthe, where, however, he expired in the arms of his apparently devoted wife. This event, from the long continued illness of the deceased, excited no surprise. After some days, Mme. N—— returned to Paris, and, notwithstanding her mourning and the paleness of her countenance, seemed to have regained some of her former cheerfulness, when one of her children, who had been left in the mansion de sante, became attacked with symptoms similar to those which preceded the death of the father, and, notwithstanding all the remedies which could be applied, died in the most frightful convulsions. Reclining the remaining infant was also carried to the tomb. Mme. N—— remained for some time in the country, and on her return to Paris, was accosted by the repeated assurances of his apology's gratitude, that notwithstanding the warnings he received from his friends, he continued to shelter upon him the traitor.

The expedition from Chili against Gen Santa Cruz was to sail about the 20th August. General Blanco Encalada was to command both the naval and military forces, with the rank of General. Lafuente, Minister of Peru, was to lead the numerous Peruvian emigrants who were to take a part in the enterprise of liberating their country from foreign domination.
