PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE

Mr Johnson, the vice and elective president of the body, gave in his resignation yesterday, and Mr Jacques Dupre was elected in his place. Mr Dupre is the oldest member of the Senate, and has held this station for many years to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. He is a firm supporter of the interests of the people.

Before leaving up the Presidency, Mr Johnson addressed his colleagues in the following manner:

Gentlemen of the Senate

The time has arrived when I must, with your leave, resign my duties to enable me to attend to the pecuniary affairs, upon which, with the most perfect confidence and security, I have intrusted proper persons to look to, from which I have received no benefit, but on the contrary, am discharging the duties and responsibilities of the office. I have endeavored to discharge the duties which devolved upon me, to the best of my ability, and regret that I have not been able to do more, but as far as I have been able, I have done so conscientiously. These imminently sacred
