

LATENT DATES.
New York... April 11
Boston... April 11
Philadelphia... May 6 Parts... April 12
Philadelphia... May 6 Parts... April 12
Baltimore... May 7 Backwards... April 10
Harrisburg... April 11
Hannibal... April 11 Tampa... April 12
Vicksburg... April 11 Vicksburg... April 11

NEW-ORLEANS BEE OFFICIAL STATE PAPER.

BY BULLITT, MAGNE & CO.
At No. 81 Chartres street.

1/2 PAGE, POSTED DAILY, per column, or advance, $10
COURT PAPERS, PUBLISHED VS. WELCH. - $10

"Truth is man's power, and Public Justice certain."

WELL-KNOWN NOMINATION OF THE NATIONAL CONVENTION FOR PRESIDENT, WILLIAM H. HARRISON, OF OHIO.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,
JOHN TYLER,
OF VIRGINIA.

FOR GOVERNOR,
HENRY JOHNSON,
Subject to the decision of the Whig State convention.

FOR CONGRESS—FIRST DISTRICT,
Second District—THOMAS GIBBS MORGAN,
Third District—JOHN MORRIS.

LOUISIANA ELECTORAL TICKET.
First District—JOHN BRENNAN, New Orleans;
Second District—JOHN BRENNAN, Baton Rouge;
Third District—JOHN BRENNAN, Shreveport;

For the Legislature—WILLIAM DE BUYER,
L. L. FERNIERE, J. C. H. GARNET, GEORGE BEDFORD,
CHRISTIAN ROSENSTEIN.

DOMESTIC MARKETS.

THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 14, 1840.

YOUNG MEN'S FRIEND ASSOCIATION.

The following gentlemen are appointed to act as the officers of Ossars B. Duran, Esq., No. 40 Royal street, this afternoon, on business of importance:

T. G. Hunt Joseph Hale,
John C. Duran, G. W. Moore,
C. Roselli, T. B. Beauchamp,
Charles Bonduquis, S. Hartley,
A. Maturino, L. Newman.

R. H. Hunt.

The celebration at St. Louis of the series of "Fair Merges," was one of those brilliant exhibitions of popular enthusiasm, which require more than a passing notice. At nearly all hours on the 5th inst. the people began to collect upon the public square. Thousands flocked thither from the neighboring country flocking to the city to join the procession, and before the mass of the crowd had gathered, the streets were thronged with delegations.

During the day all business suspended in St. Louis. Stores were shut up and workshops deserted. Rich and poor, high and low, were forth to testify their admiration of the soldier who in youth had abandoned the luxuries of home to fight his country's battles in the wilderness, and the statesman who had defended the constitutional rights of Missouri when it was perious to do so.

The procession, after passing through some of the principal streets, proceeded to a large park in the neighborhood of the city, belonging to Mr. Ashby, where several speeches were delivered, and a handsome collection was made.

The laborers, leading their horses and carts, and carrying packages, shovels, &c. joined the procession with banners bearing the emphatic inscription—

"Harrison, the poor man's friend—WE WANT WORK."

The Typographical Society erected a platform, and placed it in the procession, distributing to the people the address it had prepared.

On the 6th, a large meeting was held in the hall of the Liverpool Cotton Market, and a sum of $1000 was raised for the benefit of the poor.

LONDON MARKETS, April 14.—The quarter sale of salmagundi commenced, and as far as it was present, the market has been very quiet. The sales have not gone off well, however, and it is to be expected that they will be still less, as the market is now fully supplied with the articles of the season.

London, April 14.—This morning the day in the British markets, the brokers and buyers are busy in squaring up accounts, and the transactions are ended. The last evidence of the day's sales—interior qualities are very flat.

FOREIGN MARKETS.

LONDON MONEY MARKET, April 14.—The rate of exchange on American and Paris is about 100 francs, and the Bank of France is about 100 francs. The rate of exchange on London is the exchange on Paris, and the Bank of England is about 100 francs. The Bank of France—interior qualities are very flat.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—This morning the day in the British markets, the brokers and buyers are busy in squaring up accounts, and the transactions are ended. The last evidence of the day's sales—interior qualities are very flat.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

London, April 14.—The Duke of Wellington was again received by a violent ovation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who would have risen from his chair, but that his servant and others interceded, and he remained seated, was received with a hearty and unanimous ovation.

</