The apprehension that a multiplicity of candidates would distract the party, by infusing into adjustment of personal precisions was the principal reason for this positive decleration. Occupying, as he does, so prominent a position before the people, Mr. Banaow has by this act, demonstrated that his patrist-ism is superior to his ambition:—A more imposing claim to public confidence can not be exhibited, and we yet hope to see the services of a gentleman, who

The attempt of the Courier to arrest the circulation of a good southern whig paper, published in a slave holding section of the country, is perfectly characteristic of the course pursued by that journal. My Dear Sir:

Your letter of 31st ult., neached my residence at North Bend, by the mail yesterday, from whence it was sunt to me at this place.

You sake me whether I now am, or over have been, a measter of an abolition society.

I ansece, decisively, no.—So for from being a member of such asociety, I did not know but as you knew it, vir., by common fame, that there was or ever had been a society of that description in any of the northwestern states, until three weeks ago, until I received a letter from a citizen of this city, an entire stranger to ma, who styled himself president of the abolition society of the description of the abolition society. The styled himself president of the abolition society is the resident to the Ohio Statesman, from which is you say, this sharps "of belonging to an abolition society" near ceptied into some papers of your state. Such is the reckless course, which it, and some others of the same politics, pursue towards me, that I have determined to notice nothing which they may publish. I am, dera sir, truly yours, and the Him. John Owen.

This letter proves at once that the society in Richmond, Va, to which Gen. Hankson belonged fifty years ago, was not an abolition society in the sense in which the term is now employed. Cotemporaneous testimony clearly shows that it was a humane or colo nization society. In those days abolition, as at pre-sent understood, was unknown, for the simple reason that in three-fourths of the states slavery existed.

Our opponents know all this as well as we do; but is

WASHINGTON, June 6, 1840. EXTRACT FROM GENERAL HARRISON'S

LETTER.

"All the connexion which I ever had with the corresponding committee of the whige of Hamilton counsy (that which I suppose has been alluded to) is, that I requested the committee, through its chairman, Major Gwynne, to give the information sought for, in some of the numerous letters I reserved, in relation to my political opinions, and events in my past life.—This was to be done by sending to the writers of those letters the document which contained the information they sought. He was, also, authorized, in cases where further sprintons were saked for, to state my determination to give no other pledges of what I would or would not do, it I should be elected to the presidency. The reasons which had induced me to adopt this determination are contained in a letter written to a committee in New York, and which will, I presume, be soon published. With neither of the other members of the committee did I ever exchange one word, or, by letter, give or receive any suggestions as to the manner in which the task I had assigned to the committee was to be performed. Indeed, I lide not know until very recently who were the mem-

tions as to the manner in which the task I had assigned to the committee was to be performed. Indeed, I did not know, until very recently, who were the members of the committee. I south have no doubt of their points of the political and personal friends; and such I found them to be.

"As it has been asserted that I employed this committee to write political opinions for me, because I was unable to write them myself, it may be proper to say that I was never in the habit of doing this; and that ir all the addresses, letters, speeches, general orders, dewhich have been qublished under my name and will my sanction, there is not a line that was written o suggested by any other individual. I do not claim fo these productions any merit; nor would I conside myself blameable had I received the occasional assis tance of ny friends is this way; but I mention it, to

BANKS.

We invite attention to the following article; taken from DUFF GREEN'S Pilot, which presents the banking question in its true light. It exposes the Michiavelia olicy of the administration towards banks, in first setion, and then turning against them the powerful ma chinery of the government, to overwhelm and destroy them. If the banks are not now able to administer to the wants of seciety, their inability to do so, is justly attributable to the baleful action of the federal power upon the interests of the states snnihilating confi dence and sapping the foundation of all monet dealings. With the "ides of March" will comme a new and a better state of things. To the mechanic the article from the Pilot will be full of useful instruc to represent the original hundred thousand dollars, put is by the stockholders. The remaining two hundred thousand dollars, represent the property of the persons who have borrowed that amount from the bank. Here then is the substantial basis on which it firmly stands, the specie of the stockholders, and the property, real and personal, of the borrowers or customers. So that, for the three hundred thousand dollars of notes, which the bank has thrown into circulation, by mean of its mary.

they be the substantial basis on which it family stands the specie of the stockholders, and the property, real and parsonal, of the borrowers or customers. So that, for the three hundred thousand dolfars of notes, which the bank has frow they circulation, by means of its loans, it has, for the redemption of these notes, the specie suprial of its absentiers, and the property capital of its customers. The result is, not goly perfect security to the public, but an addition of so much, to the addition capital of the country. For the specie part is made operative, by being saved from waste, and by themselves, whilst in the pursus of their owners, would be nearly useless to the public; and, the property part, if not brought into action, in this way, would have been lifeless and unprofitable.

A man engaged in business of any sort, may own a house worth five thousand dollars. Without the facilities afforted by banks, it will be of no further use to him, than to protect him from the weather, or perhaps, to yield him a rent. Lisis irn no other respect useful to, and answers no purpose, as an agent wherewith to create capital. The bank knows his worth, and what he is doing, and will lend him where with the create capital. The bank knows his worth, taking due care not to exceed it. Here, then, his house comes in to assist him, and supplies the two roled purpose of shielding him from the weather, or yielding a rent, and of turnishing him with the means of giving full scope to his exections. This is but one of the many bountiful effects of these now calumnisted institutions, and which the, administration have determined to destroy.

The healthful influence of the bank is direct and indirect. The methanic, for eximple, who have worked out his apprenticeship and his journeymanhip, sets up on his own account. He passes will, his terms to the history and industry, hut lacks capital. If he be a boothaker, he goes to the capital in state, and indirect when he made to pay a reinous rate of interest for the loan he solicits. Wherea nobility, and, nine times in ten. get the lead of such broken-down idlers, who call themselves the gentleman class.

But, it will be said, that in lending to so many, a bank must, in the end, be greatly the looser. No doubt there will be losses. But they must be comparatively few in a well-inanaged bank, and wholly insignificant when the aggregate amount of its lustiness is taken into consideration. Lowes there will be, it is admitted; and how are steps to be repaired?—By the profits which it realises on its tonnover and above its specie capital.

Bis per cent on the specie capital of the bank, I have mentioned above, would give leut six thousand dollers per annum. But, as the bank lends three thousand, and, it will consequently receive three times six thousand, or eighteen thousand old ars, per annum. These eighteen thousand will enable it to pay expense of office rent, salaries, stationary and fuel—to make good the losses it may sustain, and to give the stockholders a fair renumeration for the money they put into the common fund of the institution. Here then, are am ple means of profit, security, and usefulness. Profit to the stockholder, security to the public in which its motes are circulated, and usefulness to that public — A well regulated banking system possesses symmetrical proportions, which maintain in perfect order the whole range of its operations. It developes inert resources, leads to punctuality in business; rosses up into activity, labor, which from want of money, would otherwise be of sluggish movement; and inspires to loans or supply of capital, at moderate, legal rate, which carries along with it energies action, certainty the whole power of the government, and the numer-ous administration presents have, for years, been sap-ping the very foundation of the banks. Where every human eff. it has been made to break them down, by taking from them the very thing by which they five and breather, public confidence. First, the administra-tion encourage them to over-trade, with the most femal-ing inducements, and when they had unwardly trust to its false promises of support, and run into foolish, it in the unhappy predicament in which it had placed them. Instead of bringing them gently back to the safe paths from which it had led them astray, and or meting out to them all the favor to which they had so safe paths from which it had test mem stary, and meeting out to be the all the favor to which they had so just a claim, arducer-like, it deserted them. No government on earth was ever before guity of so infamous a tissue of treachery, so wanton a destruction of useful instruments of public good, or so reckless a disruption of the whole business of a nation. The wonder is, that men could be found in a republic to prepetrate such acts—that a free people should have so long submitted to such tyranny—and that they and the banks have been at all able to bear up, under the heavy load, that has been mercilensly pised upon them.

But the day of setribution is at hand. We have the glad promise of better tirres, and we may hope that the severe trials we have endured will not be lost to us.—We may hope that the said lesson of experience taught us by Mr. Van Buren and his advisers, will make us wiser. That it will teach us not again to entrust the government to the artful demangague, the heartless party leader, and his base and greecy tools.
