Another meeting of 8000 sovereigns took place leston about 10 days ago. A VOICE FROM THE OLD PATRIOT. While Gen. HARRISON was on his way to Fort Veigs, he passed a few hours at Columbus, (Ohio.) His presence was greeted by the joyous acclamations of assembled thousands. He mingled freely and familiarly with his friends, and with the characteristic frankness and unreservedness of an old soldler, he passed two hours in social converse with the "Log Cabin boys" of the capital. The next morning he was again surrounded by the multitude, eager to see and speak with the veteran hero. The period of his eparture was at hand—the crowd momentarily in reasing-it was impossible for the general to have reconst communication with every individual in the ence throng-and at the instance of many of his never held, and designs which he never entertained and principles which he never cherished, and who in riends, he mounted the platform at the door of the National Hotel, and addressed the people. The fol-lowing is an imperfect sketch of his remarks. We find them in the Ohio Confederate of the 11th instant. That journal says: "We wish that every man in America had heard that speech. How would the slanderers, who impute to him motives which never actuated him, and opinions which he famously ascribe to him imbecility, and decrepitude nd covardice-how would these slanderers have been ndignantly rebuked by the righteous judgment of an honest and insulted people! But as they did not and could not hear it, we will endeavor to possess them of its sub-tance. We took no notes. Neither Gen. his character, to which we have already alluded—the bility always to say and to do exactly what is prope to be done. The reader will bear in mind, therefor that we profess only to give him the subject matte not the style and expression."

GEN. HARRISON'S REMARKS. GEN. HARRISON'S REMARKS.

GEN. HARRISON said he was greatly indebted to his fillow-citizens of Columbus and Franklin County—the most cordial hospitality had at all times been accorded to him by them. So long ago as the time when he was honored with the coormand of the "North-western Army," and held his head-quarters at Frankliston, on the other side of the river; it was his fortune to find in the people of Franklin County not only good citizens, but patriots and soldiers. Their unvarying kindness to him had laid him under many previous obligations, and their generous attentions on the present occasion he cheerfully and gratefully serying kindness to him nau saw man arrivers of the resent occasion he cheerfully and gratefully ac nowledged.

He said he had no intention to detain his friends by making a speech, and he did so in obsdience to what he understood to be the desire of those whom he adtressed. He was not corprised that public cariodily out of which not a single copy has yet been in t

circulation of the most discreditable calumnies against him, and endeavoring to persuade his countrymen that he was a coward and a federalist. He alluded to the evicence upon which the Enquirer sought to fasten the accusation that he was a black-cockede federalist—it e.—the remarks of Mr. Randolph in the Senate of the United States. He said that the attack of Mr. Randolph was met at the moment it was made and effectually disproved. He passed a high encomium upon the genius of that remarkable man, and said, that those who knew Mr. Randolph, knew that he never gave up a point in debate, or receded from his ground any where, until connicted of error. The fact that he made no reply to his answer to the charge, is proof to any familiar with his character that he himself was satisfied that he erred. Gen. Harrison explained the foundation of Mr. Randolph's charge, made at a moment of temporary irritation: He said that old Mr. Adams refused to adopt against France the measures which his party desired, and showed himself in that respect, at least, more an American than a partizan—It was that course of policy of Mr. Adams, which commanded his approbation and induced him so to express himself, at the time. Mr. Randolph remembered the expression, but probably forget the particular subject of it, and thus the very fact which proved him to be one the made of the prove him a Federalist. Gen. Harrison expressed himself with much carnestness on the injusited with subject of it, and thus the very fact which proved him death of the made of the prove him a Federalist. Gen. Harrison expressed himself with much carnestness on the injusite which was thus attempted to be inflicted on his character in his nature State, in which, when truth and virtue and honor had suffered violence everywhere else, be had hoped they would sorvive.

Gen. Harrison alluded to several other instances of gross misrepresentations or absolute falsehools—industriously and shamefully propagated by a party press. It is true, that from a long speech, filling seve the motion by adding a proposition for printing the same number of copies of the report of Gen. Knox of 1780! and Gen. Harrison's two reports of 1818 and 17:00! and Gen. Harrison's two reports of 1818 and 1819, and Mr Poinsett's letter of explainations! Mr. Preston objected to encumbering a measure of the administration, which he desired to present to the country, with such a mass of extraneous matter—but yet he would have no objection if the socretary's report could not be obtained on other terms.

Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, said he would vote for the printing of Gen. Harrison's reports with the greatest pleasure. They were highly creditable to his heart as a patriot, and to his head as a man. They breathe a spirit of liberty, and devotion to the constitution and the country, and show powers of composition which cannot fail to increase the regard entertained by the American people for the talents and patriotism of that distinguished individual. He hoped they would be extensively read. They were not only ably and beautifully written, and abounded in illustrations drawn from history, but they were perfectly free from constitutional objections.

Mr. Clay said he was anxious mostly however to send abroad the project of the secretary, and give the

Gen. Harrison alluded to several other instances of gross misrepresentations or absolute fishehoods—industriously and shamefully propagated by a party press. "It seems almost incredible, fellow-citizens," said he, "but it is true, that from a long speech, filling several columns of a paper, two short sentences have been taken from different parts of it,—these two sentences, reparated from their context, are put loughter, the name attach authentic document." He deplored that state of public sentences which could tolerate su ha system of party action, and trusted for the honor of his country and the hopes of likery that the reformation of such abuses would soon be wrought out by the force of a pure and healthy public opinion.

"Why, fellow-citizens," said Gen. Harrison, "I have recently, in that House (pointing to the State House) been charged with high offences against my country, which if ture, ought to have cost me my life," "(e," continued he, "accusations were there laid to my charge which being established, would subject me, even now, to the severest penaltics which mistry law infliest—for, I have always held that an officer may not escape the responsibilities of misconduct by resigning his commission.
