THE TWO CANDIDATES.

Our readers are all aware of the feelings with which the Tories have assailed General Harrison, but we refuse to reply to the impudent interrogatories of every foolish slang-basher who wishes to manufacture political capital out of the frankness of the veteran. Gen. Harrison has been stigmatized as the silent candidate, and has been charged with purposely concealing his opinions, so as to play a double game with the north and south. These charges have been repeatedly disproved. It has been shown by extracts from the writings and speeches of this distinguished Republican, that his sentiments on every prominent point of public policy have been freely expressed. In recent letters and in addresses delivered before vast audiences, General Harrison has frequently exhibited his opinions in decisive and unequivocal language, and has offered the people to documents published in a paper, supporting the principles with which we have allied, he has been invariably pursued. Thanks to the common sense and honesty of the people, it has been unavailing.

It has however, been observed, that while the Tories were berating General Harrison for referring many of his sentiments to his letters, speeches, and public acts, they forgot entirely that their nephew, Mr. Van Buren, had done the same. They neglected to examine the records of the House, or they might have gained some information of the placing in his correspondence with the administration, have been discrediting a man of such a position, and have replied the accusations of the Van Burenites, by demonstrating that their champion in this very correspondence, adopted a similar course.

Gen. Harrison, in his letter to the editor of the "Daily American," dated August 21, 1846, states:

"I am fully satisfied that the two candidates are equally qualified for the office of President."
