NEW-ORLEANS

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 29, 1841.

THE ELECTION.

The decisive day is past and gone, and the election of Governor, Members of Congress, and Members of the Legislature, has been held throughout the State. The returns of the votes polled will be received, we hope, in time to be published in our paper of to-morrow morning. We shall then be able to speak with certainty of the result of the election, and to congratulate our friends upon the success of the Whig ticket, or to console them for its defeat. We have no fears as to the issue. We believe that the Whig ticket will be successful in every parish in the State, and that the Whig candidates for Governor, Congress, and the Legislature, will be elected by large majorities. We have no doubt that the Whig majority in the State will be greater than it was in 1840, when it was 5,000. We have no doubt that the Whig majority in the city of New-Orleans will be greater than it was in 1840, when it was 1,500. We have no doubt that the Whig majority in the parish of Orleans will be greater than it was in 1840, when it was 1,000. We have no doubt that the Whig majority in the parish of Jefferson will be greater than it was in 1840, when it was 200. We have no doubt that the Whig majority in the parish of St. Bernard will be greater than it was in 1840, when it was 100. We have no doubt that the Whig majority in the parish of St. Tammany will be greater than it was in 1840, when it was 100. We have no doubt that the Whig majority in the parish of Plaquemines will be greater than it was in 1840, when it was 100. We have no doubt that the Whig majority in the parish of St. Bernard will be greater than it was in 1840, when it was 100.
