The City of New Orleans and the LogisInture.

Mr. Entron: Those of the citizens of New Orleans who have attended to the subject, have seen with no little concern that the propositions to annex the city of Lafayette to that of New Orleans, and to extend the nort of Orleans to the upper limits of the atend the port of Orleans to the upper limits of the concerned.

As far as the writer of this article has been enabled to ascertain public opinion, these projects have net he almost unanimous disapprehation of the people of New Orleans. Of the three great sections into which our city has been divided, there is none whose interests or position could really be benefitted by them whilst there are two at least whose prosperity and advancement would probably be maternally injured.—The Second Municipality, at present the most prosperious of the three, has nothing more to desire, and the advancement and good administration abould but attitudate the others to do likewise without bickering or jealousy, for there is room in the broad field of our advantageous position for all to reap some share in the rich and growing harvests of wealth and fair profile. But if the busy spirit of speculation is to be constantly cherished and hearkened to in preference to the lers bosterous, but just claims of vested rights and existing charters, the vast population who reade being without the second of their best interests; they must reast, and all hope of that unity of action and of feeling which are so essential to the steady progress of our great city must be abandoned. As to the Third Municipality, if her interests and fair claims to protection are to be constantly neglected and spurned,—if the voice of her thirty thousand inhabitants is to be hushed, to appease the clamors of a few speculators, then let her abandon her organization as a seoarate Municipality, let the other hands of the season of the speculators, then let her abandon her organization as a seoarate Municipality, let the other hands of the speculators, then there imposed upon her without her knowledge or consent, by the act of division of 1830; when yet but a new and feeble settlement, like an infant deserted by its parent, she was by that act, without being consuited, east off from the parent city, and thrown upon her own resources before she had attained strength and means to sustain a separate administration. She anow or of anybody size. In estatement was true only in the sense that Mr. Webster had had an annuity placed to his credit by some of the commercial cursens of Boston.

From love and respect for the public man, without his consent and without his knowledge, they had shown that regard for him which evaneed their own good feelings, and which was eminerally to their credit. Mr. Webster had only been acquainted with this fact within ten days past, and Mr. Windhropread an extract from the letter accompanying the statement made to Mr. Webster.

Mr. W. said it was with infinite sorrow and diagons that he olluded to those personal mattern, so entirely irrelevant to any proper question before the House, and which had been dragged into the debate to injure a public man. What was done he regarded as of the highest credit to law constituents, and an act in no wise discreditable to the worthy Senator who had received this mark of firmdship and contilience from a portion of the people of his State. Mr. Webhad received this mark of fremdship and contidence-from a portion of the people of his State. Mr. Web-ster had now been elected three times a Senator in Congress by the State of Massachusetts, and the peo-ple of that commonwealth had the most undumnish-ed confidence in his integrity and devoted to the pub-lic service.

pie of that commonwealth had the most undimmished confidence in his integrity and devoted to the public service.

Mr. Yancry, of Ala., was also permitted to make a personal explanation, and first he complained of the reference to his remarks in the reported proceedings of the Baimmore American. He had not send that he should loath to keep company with Daniel Webster. What he had said was that he should loath to keep company with Daniel Webster. What he had said was that he should loath to keep company with Daniel webster, what he had said was that he should loath a political connection with him. Nor, as stated in the American, had Mr. Ashmun of Mans, demed the charges which he had made against Mr. Webster, and called for proof.

The explanation of Mr. Wintbrop, Mr. Y. continued, hore him out to the main facts of his argument. It was denied that he was the pensioned agent of manufacturers, but it was admitted that twas in receipt of favors from the consumerial mr. of Mansachusetts. And now, if the genileman from Mansachusetts would gratify him so far, he would like to know who was the author of the letter just read and announcing the transmission of the intelligence in regard to the author of the communication to Mr. Wintbrop and that really his curiosity had not gone so far in diving into the accrets of other genileman so ask for the suthor of the communication to Mr. Webster. He had been accking for the facts in reference to the charges of the honorable member, and the members of this House, how they would like to have all their secrets history, and all that their friends had done for them, or their enemies against them, arraigned before Congress, for examination and public inspection.

Mr. Yancry gaid he had found these charges in a newspaper, and as they were against a public man who had been arraigned on this floor, he held that he had a right to make use of them.

Mr. McDuffile Spoke against the American side of the Oregon question, last Saturday. He is in favor of any course that will 'keep the peace,' prevent the ringers' from getting their freedom, and the purches of conton. As slavery is, in Mr. McDuffie's opinion, the corner stone of freedom, it is no wonder that he is adverse to a course that he fears will remove that stone; and as worth, where will be our prosperity, if that article should be depressed? What is Oregon, compared with slavery and cotton! Wars we contending for Teasa, the case would be very different. Then war would be an act of righteous-

IMPROVEMENTS IN LOUISVILLE. -- The Louis Journal speaks in glowing terms of the improvement in that city. Among other evidences of prosperity she is rapidly advancing in manutactures. The Journal says — A few years ago, her insertess were all most exclusively commercial. But a wholesome change has already taken place, and our citizens now manufacture articles for export, for which, but a short time ago, they depended on the enterprise of other citizen. This is as it should be. There is no Western eity which presents greater facilities for manufactures than ou own, and no one that is so favorably situated in relaown, and no one that is so havorably situated in rela-tion to markets. The only wonder is that those fa-cilities and advantages should have remained so long unimproved. But the future promises to reverse the folly of the past, and the day is not distant when the busy hum of industry and enterprise will proceed from thousands of manufacturing establishments, ai-mated in every street of our city.
