ad-iphia Ladger has the following sensible remarks, in which we heartily concur:

The convention of New York for amending the constitution, which has been sitting for many weeks past, had adopted a section which secured to mainted women all their property, acquired before or design year reasons. A few days ago, it reconsidered its leave on this section, and rejected this section by a voice of 19 to 59. Charles O'Corner, a lawyer in the city of New York, moved their consideration, and opposed the motion with great zeal.

Thus has a reformation more needed than any other, been defeated by the pertinacity of a few daw-yers, who cannot surmount that ridge of impossible Andes to most kewers, the barbarons features of the common law relating to women, and by few traders who regard the property of women as man's kew in who regard the property of women as man's kew in the prevent of the common key relating to women, and year, which for the common key relating to women, and year, which for the common key relating to women, and year, which for the common key relating to women, and year, which for the common key relating to women, and year, which for the common key to the convention of those States, which for the large state, and thus serve as an example to devery other State. But this hope has failed; and in these State, married women, with their children, page and the property. As the men of this convention have proved amounts between the second and the property.
