Thursday Morning, Feb. 15, 1849.

☞ We are compelled to defer a special notice to the editor of the Courier, for want of room. Such notices should take place in the columns of the paper, and not before the St. Louis Exchange, by whose proprietors the world of Mandeville is owned exclusively. The world of Mandeville is not a public watering place, pleasant. Persons who seek it are those who, for summer retreats, will not find the Exchange.

Gen. Taylor and the People.

Gen. Taylor is progressing towards the enjoyment of the most glorious reward. His journey, at every stage, is encouraged by the expressions of popular love and regard. The veteran patriot and hero, in exchange of hospitalities and receiving the spontaneous greetings of those people who have confided upon him, is most deeply affected himself. The great and endless honors of the Republic. The tokens of reverence and respect of persons of political enthusiasm—facts are evidences of a people and a nation—and a warm attachment, with the President elect may justly claim as homage due to the man, and not to the office. Degrees which attach to a man in his private capacity, to service during the administration which Washington and Jefferson shadow under the Republic, and to the defence of a people's freedom in peace as in time of war. Gen. Taylor is not to look with abiding confidence to the affections of his countrymen, because they have been tried. But they look with abiding confidence to the man who, in the crisis of party animosity was by acclamation called to the chief magistracy of the Republic, without a preference to the advancement of party, when neither sectional nor political animosities were engaged—and when the two sections were to be combined with equal confidence to the great object of the future. Gen. Taylor is not to be deceived in the character of the people, who are rebounding from the influence of party, to the true feeling of nationality. He is not to be deceived in the character of the people, who, in the midst of party animosity, were ready to call the statesman from the shades of private life, to the highest station in the gift of the people. He is not to be deceived in the character of the people, who, in the midst of party animosity, were ready to call the statesman from the shades of private life, to the highest station in the gift of the people. Ireland.

The judges have decided against a writ of error in the case of O'Brien, Meagher, and others. An appeal to the House of Lords is the only remedy. Application to the prisoners' has been made, but they decline, and are resolved to submit to their fate.

Italy.

The Pope demands the intervention of Austria, to resist him in temporal power; but France and Sardinia remonstrate against interference, as the Roman people have lost all reverence for the Pope, spiritually as well as temporally, and will turn treat it with contempt. They do not desire that a monarchy should be restored during the administration of Mazzini and Garibaldi. Under the circumstances, the Pope is left to his own resources, and will not receive the assistance of Austria. Cardinal Antonelli, the Pope's minister, has fled to Gaeta. Cardinal Bofondi, the Pope's confessor, has also left Rome. Cardinal Gazzoli, the Pope's confessor, has also left Rome. Cardinal Gazzoli, the Pope's confessor, has also left Rome. Cardinal Gazzoli, the Pope's confessor, has also left Rome.

England.

The British Government have determined to meet the wishes of the people and commerce, peace, which has caused an advance in funds.

Germany.

Prussia remains tranquil. The Frankfort assembly has declared that the dignity of Emperor is to be given to the reigning German Prince; thus opening a rivalry between Prussia and Germany for the throne of Naples. (What this can possibly mean we are unable to conjecture.—Some words must be wrong, but we follow the despatch

Louisiana.

Break in the Levee.—The Bayou Sara Ledger of the 10th instant has the following:

Just as our paper was going to press we learned that about two hundred and fifty yards of the levee, fronting and above Wm. Taylor's plantation, on the opposite side of the river, broke away yesterday morning, and the water is now pouring through the crevasse in a large stream. The water is about two feet deep on the land, and is rising rapidly.

A Tug-boat was on the same day the speaker left the state on the river and the prospect of an overflow

The Levee.—The water has been within three inches of the top of the levee in front of the city, and has been running over in many places. Should this continue much longer, the consequences will be disastrous to the city. The water is now within a few
