BER MAJESTY'S REPLY.

With much pleasure I receive, sir, the letter which accredits you to my Gourt in the bharaeter of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Pleitipotentury of the United States. It is also exceedingly graieful to me to be assured by you, in the name of the President of the Republic, of the lively desire which animates him, so well as his Government, to continue the annieable relations which happily exist between the two countries—a desire of the sincerity of which I have received, with the highest appreciation proofs recent and unequivocal. Equally satisfied that, in the sign of progress, the first duty of Government as to preserve the public peace and keep inviolate the latih of treaties, it gives me pleasure to assure you that to this secred and the proof of the desired of the sacred of t

At the North he knew there was a deep opposition to slavery, an opposition dictared by the feelings oil the purest humanity and philanthropy. But while he believed there was, in their resolutions, about an equal amount of concession, has thought he might have asked more from the North, in the sway of concession, that from the South. With the gentlemen from the free States, what was this subject but an abstraction I An abstraction, it was true, braid upon the principles of hormanity and philanthropy, noble when not detated or used for party ends and party purposes. The North was asist memorically greater than the slave state, and greatness of power and magnanimy should ever go tigether. On the part of the North the opposition to slavery was a sentiment of philanthropy and himpathy; and, when sentiment of that kind are eneral means the part of the North the opposition to make serifices to enforce them, they are truly noble. But, when the anchibit by those who cannot spmpathize with you it is not so. On the one side, it is a sentiment without any sacrifice or perit or danger or low; on the other, there must be a wast and mealculate sucrise of property—without you of the North being burdened with any portion of a sentiment of all the social relations not property—of hile, and of every thing dear.
