

That law gave to the Board of Bank Managers representing the State in those institutions, powers of the highest order and a right of controlling supervision of the directors appointed by the stockholders by requiring the assent of two of the managers to give them validity. This law was intended to provide for the property banks in liquidation a special control different from that exercised by the Board of Directors of the other banks. Its main object is to preserve such property from depreciation and to enforce the observance, on the part of those banks of the fundamental rates laid down in the first section of the act approved 24th of February, 1852.
