A STORY OF THE EMOCRINOS.—A story of the "knockings" was told us recently, which we think too good to be loss, therefore wie give it a start.

In the western part of New York the "spiring usl manifestations" have created considerable excitement. Among the subjects of this excitement was a simple man, of middle age, whose bumps of marwillousness and reverence were equally league. He was of coince superatiously religious, and the knockings, of which had taken every occasion to be a wintees, impressed him with the utmost sage.

The manife wife, however was a very different kind of being. She scouted the "spirits," laughed at her husband, and took overy occasion to rally him upon what also deemed his special weakness.
