With the people's attention is fixed on events in the Cuban Islands, the excitement, and the suspense that this is precisely what is most difficult to be obtained. Rumors we have in this place, and a multitude of epithets from friends of his party on the one side, and from enemies of his party on the other, and from neutrals, who are equally divided in their opinions of the existing government on the one hand, and the political details which are furnished, indicate that we are alike half-blind in the effort to learn facts, and facts only. In looking back to events of interest respecting the revolution, we find that what was resolved upon from a desire to secure a peaceful termination of our so-called government, which had been established by force, was entirely overthrown by the concurrent action of every correspondent, viz., the independence of Puerto Prince and Tum. Touching these two, a common movement of the struggle—the independence of the Cuban Islands, was resolved at the office of the New York Tribune, by Mr. Greeley. We might subdivide into two classes of similar news, which we find in the Sun, the Herald, and other journals, but these will do.

Havana, Tuesday, July 15, 1851.

This evening has had another period, or rather a new chapter in its history. The American Consul, Puerto Principe, of a numerous family, has been assassinated by the people, who, it is said, were incited to do it by the Spanish authorities, to the mortification of the population, and put a price upon the head of every individual who would expose the conduct of the Spanish authorities.

The Spanish authorities, however, have done nothing to punish the assassin, and I doubt much if there will be any punishment for the assassin.
