OUR WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

Indignation has prevailed here from Friday for a few days past, during which time some of our leading citizens have taken the liberty to publish in the public press, and to circulate in private conversation, a series of articles, the object of which was to impeach the President of the United States, on the ground that he had violated the Constitution, by appointing to the office of Secretary of War, a man who had been convicted of a crime, and who was therefore disqualified by law from holding that office.

OUR WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

It is a singular circumstance, that the articles in question were published in the public press, and were widely circulated, before the President had even taken the oath of office. It is also a singular circumstance, that the articles were published in the public press, and were widely circulated, before the President had even taken the oath of office.
