IS THERE A WHIG PARTY!

There is some talk now-a-days about the resuscitation of the Whig party. The National Intelligencer, ever faithful and hopeful, predicts a nationalized Whig victory in 1856. We wish we could share the confidence of that patriotic and able journal, but whether from political coldness, or because we look upon political affairs without suffering our feelings to be influenced by our desires, we are free to say that we are far from believing in the existence of public sentiment confirmatory of the opinion of the Intelligencer. It is true that our opponents have been of late signally defeated; that the great and seemingly invincible party which bore Mr. PIERCE in triumph to the White House, is shivered into fragments, torn to tatters, and becomes an easy prey to its adversaries' attacks. But the latter are not united; rather, they consist of all the elements of opposition Whigs included) which existence of the Administration has ushered into and nurtured into strength. The victories which have been recently achieved, are but the downfall of Locofocoism, but the ascendancy of that pure, untainted, and conservative Whiggery which we have labored to support, and to whose fortunes we have ever been willing. Coalitions between portions of the Whig party, disaffected Democrats, Nebraska men, and Free Soilers, have each and all been those defeats of Democracy, which, probably, during the ensuing elections, will assume thoroughly the discomfiture of the whole party. But we repeat, these victories are not those to the benefit of Whiggery, or that prove them to have reunited, and organized on any safe and solid National basis.

We are the last man in our fidelity to Whig principles. We would to-morrow cheerfully see them merge with our brethren of the Native Ranks, could we do so upon a basis of honor, equality and fraternity. But how is this to be accomplished? How can Southern Whigs unite with those recognized exclusively for Northern ends? Can the re-enactment of the Missouri compromise offer a common bond of union? To such a platform many Southern Whigs would be inevitably hostile, many more would be indifferent, while not one in a thousand would look at it as a purely national principle. This platform would be no platform for the Whig party, and as far as we can discern, it is the only one proffered by the North. The Whigs of the North seem crazed upon the Nebraska question. Having fought against it to the best of their abilities, though in vain, they are not content with defeat, but they must be overborne, and now they are ready to sacrifice the whole party, to sustain honest, able and consistent men. Those the Whig party has lost, but it has never been a party of principles, but of mere interests, and becomes an easy prey to its adversaries' attacks. But the latter are not united; rather, they consist of all the elements of opposition Whigs included) which existence of the Administration has ushered into and nurtured into strength. The victories which have been recently achieved, are but the downfall of Locofocoism, but the ascendancy of that pure, untainted, and conservative Whiggery which we have labored to support, and to whose fortunes we have ever been willing
