Mr. D. Conconax publishes a card in year terday's Letta, in the course of which the following sentences appear:

The destardly insimations which I have been told appeared in the Ber. I deem between the appeared in the columns. We consider a facts in its columns.

We consider our astonishment as this insequence. The editors of the Ber are not in the habit of making "instructions" of any kind. They generally express their opinions in plain and intelligible language. With respect of Mr. Commonan, they have never introduced of Mr. Commonan, they have never introduced.

the dictation of party majorities, to override popular suffrage: thirdly, because the removal of Sherif Birry, under such circumstances, would be an infraction of the spirit of the 97th article of the Constitution, which was clearly intended to apply exclasively to case of extreme urgency. The question for the Legislature cannot be whether ballothous were or were not broken, or what might have been the result, had no such outside the legislature cannot be whether ballothous were or were not broken, or what might have been the result, had no such outside the legislature the direct power to overrule judicial densions; to reduce to a mility the verdicts of the Courts pronounced in conformity to its we laws: to substitute fix will for law? We say it has not: we gualatant that, unless for causes of the most palpable nature, and for evils prensing so directly upon the interests of the community, as to require speedy relief by the swiftast constitutions remedy, the Legislature insegurates a mischevous and dangerous procedent in the employment of its power to address a civil functionary out of office.

This view of the sabject is extorted from its purious the subserve. We would scorn to argue the question as a partisan. But we think the General Assembly is pursuing a policy inherently victors, and which will tend to breed infinite discouthat, to engender and promote discord and anary passeous; to inherently victors, and which will tend to breed infinite discouthat, to engender and promote discord and anary passeous; to reduce the relief to the population of the legislature based on the reliabilities, and to multiply, the erris it is the reliable, and to multiply the exist it is the reliable of the proposed of the population of the proposed of the propo
