THE DAILY BEE. WEDNESDAY MORNING, OCT. 20.

A SENSIBLE SPEECH.

The Boston papers publish in existate a speech delivered by Gen. Jerremann Davis to the assembled Democracy in Faneuil Hall, on the evening of the lith inst. We have perused this effort with some surprise and great gratification. How and why it is we knew not, but nothing is more certain than that the doughteest fire-easters of the South, in proportion as they journey due North, sober down into rational, Union-loving and conservative individuals. Gen. Davis is no departure from this rule. His speech in Paneuil Hall, though more elaborate in its range, and broader in its scope, partakes of the patriotic and pacific character of the briefer addresses made by him at Portland and elsewhere. The theme of his discourse was the necessity of a steady maintenance of the rights and powers of the individual States as the most efficient means of preserving the Union. His argument was strongly put, demonstrating that the federal government has no right to determine what is properly, each community deciding for itself. Not having this right, it is equally desirate of the power of destroying properly. The Union was formed for purposes of materially protection, and the States united together the make that protection complete. The agitation relative to slavery is therefore wrong, unjust and contrary to the spirit and meaning of our government, since the question concerns the South, and not the North The following passage displays as feeling not usually prominent in Gen. Davis's speeches: What, my friends, must be the consequences of this agritation and one will, it mad the protection of the script in the contrary to the spirit and question of one of the script and one of the script

It has been insidensity working the purposes of sention for the destruction of the Union, on which our hopes of future greatness depend. On the one side of the question, then, you strife and estrangement, tending solvey it is strife and estrangement, tending solvey it was a strife and estrangement, tending solvey in the sarried of the in to the doctrine of State rights, a

We think item Davic's user to the Northwill be agit to benefit the South. He is known to be a strenuous supporter of Southern rights, and was expected, perhaps, tindulge in fiery denuncation of Northern opinion. He has had the tact and good sense to abstain from all such rhodomontade, and to endeave by positions reseming and haid expositions of constitutional power twin his audiences to conviction. The people of the North must naturally infection the moderation of Gen. Davis that the South is not half as purposed us, or as hostile to the North as might be imagined, especially it has me and an agent and greater than the first this conclusion.
