John Bell on Secession.

We doubt, says the Paineville Journal, if the case against secession has ever been put with greater power or felicity than by Mr. Bell, in a letter addressed to the meeting convened at Knoxville, Tennessee, in 1856. In that letter he held the following emphatic language, though only tantamount to that used by the Hon. William S. King, of Alabama, the Democratic candidate for the Vice-Presidency in 1856:

It may be asked in what does the safety of the country consist? I answer in the preservation of the Union. In every aspect in which I am able to view the subject I regard the dissolution of the Union as the direst calamity which can befall the people—the people of the south as well as of the North. It is fashionable to shout a response to the general truth. I am prepared to state none within the range of probable events. I admit the possible occurrence of a state of things, in the operation of the Federal Government, in which could be a greater evil than the desecration of the Union. A glaring tyranny, an oppressive and persistent violation of plain and indisputable Constitutional obligations, or a similar disregard of Constitutional limitations in the practice of the authority, on behalf of the whole people, of the authority, would be a virtual abrogation of the bonds of union, and justify a resort to revolutionary remedies. To the terms revolution, revolutionary remedies in relation to the possible oppressions of a majority in wielding the Legislative and Executive powers of the Government, I have no fault to find in the political catechisms of those who seek to establish a peaceful mode of breaking up the Union by declaring that the Constitution is a right of secession in the States. I regard such a doctrine as equally censured, defective and mischievous—as one which in case have no efficiency in procuring civil war; and mischief may, because it tends to mislead and seduce the people of a State into a revolutionary movement, in the belief that they have all legal sanction of humanity from the ordinary hazard of a revolt against an established Government.

The Prince at New York.

The Herald of the 13th devotes twenty columns to an account of the reception of the Prince of Wales, his breakfast at Mayor Wood's, the ball in the evening, &c., &c. The whole affair seems to have been extremely brilliant and successful. The only unpleasant thing that occurred was the following:

An assembly of a very unruly and unpleasant nature occurred in front of the Astor House last night. The demonstration was such, it is said, as to call for a display of force at that hotel by a majority in Mobile county.

AN ARRIS-STRATION THICKER—The Democratic defeat and the Republican victory in Mobile.

Of all the demonstrations of the Constitutional Union party in our city none can compare with that of last evening for magnificence of display, completeness in detail, enthusiasm of those who participated in it, or unanimity of feeling that was exhibited in the progress and termination. Such sympathy by handfuls cheers, applause, & more substantial tokens of appreciation, such as the showering of flowers, evergreens and bouquets, indeed every such demonstration of good will that ever with the Hon.
