NEW ORLEANS:

[illegible] of the Federal [illegible] adopts and enforces [illegible] for the transportation of food [illegible] points in the interior to New Or[illegible] The precautions taken to prevent per[illegible] from carrying themselves of the enormous [illegible] offered by rebels and rebel chiefs are [illegible] subjects of astonishment. Gen. [illegible] has a right, as the military power of the city, to say who shall remain and who shall leave it. This is one of the grounds upon which he is vested by martial law, and though it [illegible] gun muzzles to inconvenience, it is not to be disputed or doubted. The permit to [illegible] [illegible] citizens, under such restrictions as Gen. Ber[illegible] has thought proper to impose, will, in the course of a few days, greatly alleviate the distress prevailing among the poor, and to some extent relieve the middle classes. Whether existing scarcity of meat, flour and other articles of food, and [illegible] those who enjoy a full share of the [illegible] wealth can afford to enter their tables [illegible] remains to be seen. Next day, too, adds to the difficulties by diminishing the extent from which country supply brought to the markets. [illegible] the enormous activity with which our population are wresting the luxuries from Texas, and the flour from that and other States.

We hope by the timely measures adopted, to see our people saved from that evil—more appalling than hostile bayonets—a deficiency of food. But the Federal commander might, without transcending the strict line of his duty, [illegible] a little more to the unfortunate inhabitants. At present they are wholly without a [illegible] absolutely and utterly cut off from all [illegible] of communication, as much so as if they were confined to ALEXANDER SELKIRK'S desert island. This is a most painful affliction. Parents are separated from their children; children from their husbands; sisters from their brothers, without the possibility of hearing from them, or of learning directly or indirectly of their fate. With respect to the outer world—the South and [illegible] North—New Orleans is buried in complete obscurity. We have not a remote idea of what may have occurred within the past three weeks, and in the absence of facts, a thousand [illegible] absurd rumors prevail, and the air [illegible] with stories of the truth or falsehood of which [illegible] can be entirely responsible or [illegible] slightest alleviation of our forlorn state might be afforded if Gen. BUTLER would allow the letters [illegible] remaining in the Post-Office to be distributed. We see it stated that on the evening of the arrival of the Federal forces in our city, a [illegible] scrambling of men broke open the doors of the Post-Office, destroyed a large number of letters, and rifled the contents of others. Only most criminal ask will momentarily deprive a thousands of persons of the opportunity of perusing their correspondence; but there probably [illegible] several thousand letters of interest in the Post-Office, the opening of which would quiet the uneasiness and solicitude of many a family. It is, of course, within the province of the Federal commander to examine all letters before delivery, nor would any one eager to hear from friend or relative object to the proceeding.

It has been intimated that the United States authorities will shortly establish a mail to the North at least, and to Europe. Any such arrangements to the public will be most sensibly appreciated. As for the newspaper press, it is [illegible] in a state of collapse and exhaustion, not [illegible] so much on account of the [illegible] upon its freedom, as from the total absence of all [illegible] papers, and the [illegible] difficulty [illegible] existing of making up an interesting journal. We understand there are several thousands of the cash attached to Gen. BUTLER'S [illegible]. If any one feels entitled to the sufferings of the press, and we trust that [illegible] will be enlisted in its behalf. Every [illegible] in the shape of a newspaper published out of the city of New Orleans—no matter where—would be one of the most agreeable spectacles imaginable. If ever the pen is opened we may indulge the hope of having continued; if not [illegible] will cease to other papers. Meanwhile our readers must make proper allowances for the [illegible] and unattractive appearance of the city press. It will disappear when the U. S. authorities permit the introduction among us of [illegible] published elsewhere.

Yesterday's Savannah Dolta copies the following from the Mobile Evening News of the 5th instant:

Cashier Bullitt, of Louisville, Kentucky, under the presentage of a noble spirit, yesterday [illegible] information for the Federal [illegible] and was conducted in custody to Ship Island. The following extracts:

With few exceptions the wounded are doing well. Those of the South [illegible] those of the North—all treated equally well—and when [illegible] troops of opposite [illegible] are brought [illegible] all is hushed here. The kind attention which the Government is so anxious to provide [illegible] upon all alike. The most skilful surgeons and the very best of attendants are [illegible] upon them.

The ladies of the city generally and the Sisters of Charity vie with each other to see who will do the most good.

The kindness and attention so liberally shown to the sick and wounded soldiers by the citizens of this place, especially by the ladies, many of whom visited the hospitals daily, dispensing delicacies in worthy of all praise, and [illegible] sympathy for human suffering, will never be forgotten by the inmates of the hospitals.

Those who have died have been buried at the beautiful spot, "Cave Hill Cemetery," where all numbered, and they by side [illegible] to that immortal [illegible] If their friends desire [illegible] they can be easily identified.

[illegible] remains a list of the names of the officers of the Confederate [illegible] which we find the following:

Capt. Francis Morgan, New Orleans, Sixth Regt. Louisiana; Capt. Bonner R. Alexander, Thirteenth Regt. Louisiana; Lieut. D. C. Hall, New Orleans, wounded in [illegible]—dangerously; Lieut. Bonner R. Alexander, Thirteenth Regt. Louisiana, [illegible] severely; Lieut. [illegible] Regt. Louisiana, [illegible] severely in [illegible]; Lieut. [illegible] Armstrong, Ala. wounded in leg.

Lieut. Bonner was wounded in both legs, [illegible] on the ground as the battle had almost ceased [illegible] a noble Kentuckian by birth, [illegible] and planted his [illegible] under the [illegible] the gun of his [illegible]
