WEW ORLEANS SATURDAY MORNING, MAY 10, 1862 Anction Sales This Day.

WHAT'S THE NEWS ! New Orleans has been at all times a paradise for newsmongers. No where is there a city soand so willing to accept the most improbable stories without caring particularly for the evi dence on which they are haved. It has bee said that Richmond is the grand focus whence are disseminated ten thousand wild and excl carcely be as credulous as those of New Orleaus. Before the occupation of our city by th Federal forces, when the mails were arriving daily, and the telegraph was usually in working wont to be circulated, and to find heats of be the people are impulsive and sanguine, and present conjuncture it is ten times worse than Federals has for the nonce established a line of every other place. In the absence of the mails, tions, and with Federal pickets stationed eurose equality difficult, we are nearly as ig orant of what is occurring in all the rest o the world putilde of us, as the inhabite of the plauet Satura may be supposed to be At the best a sirny newspaper of some neighboring place probably a week old fluds its hands of a favored few, and even then most of

It is curinformed of all topics of news than private inthe political goeslo of the day-and their name is legion—tike a peculiar pleasure in entjecting tion. In ordinary times the press may be said to be some what ahead of the public in the pos-session of facilities for ascertaining the events of the day; but a moment's reflect teach the importunate quarists that at present are all pretty much on the same level, and that consequently journalists are as little gifted with the faculty of discernthat is taking place elsewhere, without mail or telegraph to help them, as any other profession. Yet thousands of persons cannot be persuaded of this fact, and pestering newspaper folk with their ill-timed and super fluous interrogatories. In reference to supposed engagements in Virginia and the West-to plausible narratives of grand battles, and decitive victories, of which ten thousand different versions have been traveling from mouth to mouth for the past week, we can candidly any that with all our efforts we have been totally ceeded in reading one of eye-witnesses of desperate actions, but have not found one-of pacontaining statements of these reported fights, but have not seen one. We are therefore scaptical, and once for all, desire the throng of quil nuncs to possess their souls in patience: If one-half of the prevailing rumors should prove true, the knowledge will make its way in due equaon, mangre all possi-ble obstacles. A spicy debute between Powell, of Kentucky, and Summer, of Massachuseetts, on a resolution doncerning the arrest of citizens in Kentucky took place. The former denounced the authorities as tyrants and asarpers.

In the House the Confiscation bill was debuted, Lovejoy said that the defenders of shavery and rebellion were synonymous, that it was the daty of the Government to destroy slavery to preserve the republic and the Union. He wanted to speak in Southern States without faur of lyoching and tar and feathers. To put down the rebellion and restore the Union, elu-very must be destroyed.

Vallandigham said the speech made noteide of Congress against the Democratic party by Benj. F. Wade grossly slandered him. Be called Wade a liar, a scoundrel and a coward.
Advices from Mexico, via Havana, say that an unsatisfactory conference had taken place between the allied powers and the commander at Yera Cruz. 'The General commanding the French forces had determined to march alone in the city of Mexico, the English and Spanish Planpotentiaries having decided to withdraw their troops. Juarez was said to be ready to satisfy all claims, and rejects the idea of a mon-archy for Mexico.

THE IDENTIFICATION: NARRATIVE OF FACTS, BY A CONSTABU-LARY OFFICER.

James Murphy was examined, and stated that Courtney casually had met him on the read, since days before the attack, and advised him to go to the fair to sell his culves, as it was an excellent market.

The Widow Murphy's dying declaration was then read, when a murmur of surprise and in dignation ran through the court. Persons who had hitherto felt inclined to sympathize with the prisoner began now to look upon him as a hardened and hypocritical rufflan.

The case for the prosecution closed.

The leading witness for the defense was Courtney's brother, Billy, a handsome lad:
"Recollected the night Widow Murphy's house was attacked: siept on that night in the bidd with his brother. Witness and the prisoner went to bed about 10 o'clock; locked the house door, and hung the key behind the parlor-door; the prisoner got into bed first: he slept next it his wall, and witness elept on the outside. Prisoner and witness both said their prayers before they got, into bed. The prisoner was in bed. In the morning when witness awake bed. [Continued] death being passed. At length the Judge, who had been garing at some imaginary object in the air, said, "Prisoner!"

At the word the couvict—for each, indeed, he now was—started up into an sreet position, and pushing back his loug dark harr, which had fallen down over his forehead and eyes, showed a face of marble whiteness, but an unatirring eye of surpassing beauty.

"Prisoner!" said the Judge, again.

"My lord," said the prisoner, "I have been asked if I have any thing to say why reatence of death and execution should not be passed upon me. If the question be not altogether an insult and a mockery, may I be permitted to say a few words to the court—not, I am aware, that they can have any influence upon my fate, but, my lord, that they may be remembered when I am no more;" and his lips quivered.

The Judge made no answer, father permitting him to proceed than giving him permission.
