WARMER EXCITATIONS.

The Tribune, we see this, can be a little alive to the excitement, over the capture of Forts Hatteras and Clarke, by the combined forces of Flag Officer Stringham and Gen. Butler. The Tribune may have evidently seems to relish it, and justly enough, for indulging to give have been at last unwillingly aroused, the Southerners should not feel so disheartened at the extravagance of their jubilation. If victories were events of frequent occurrence among the Yankees, they would hardly consider the one in question an object of such an outpouring of triumph. The capture of 100 guns, manned with four thousand soldiers, should absolutely succeed in capturing a fort armed with only 30, guns, and a garrison of one thousand men, because of the cowardice of the sailors, is certainly a wonderful and triumphant exploit—just such an exploit as manifestly calls forth a universal shout of exultation from Yankeedom. It is the counter part of the original achievements of Gen. McClellan in Western Virginia. That invincible warrior—the Napoleon of the West, as his admirers term him—did certainly exhibit some extraordinary evidences of military genius and valor. With an army of ten thousand men, he actually did conquer in capacity, and starve out some four or five hundred Virginians, and compel them to surrender, after they had killed deeply in rebels of the enemy (as they themselves testified) half ten thousand. General, and had seen their Colonel wounded and a prisoner. That heroic deed was hailed with joyous acclamations throughout the North, and Gen. McClellan even the proud, commanding station as the chief of the troops of the Potomac entirely in the advantageous manner effected in Western Virginia.

The staple of Yankee victories is invariably the same. Whenever they manage to make a force contemptuously short of their opponents in the proportion of four or five to one, and, moreover in the superiority of transports, and shore obtain an advantage, they make the welkin ring with the clamor of their triumph. Throughout the campaign, the capture of Pickens's command in Western Virginia, and the recent taking of two forts on the coast of North Carolina, stand forth as the military monuments of Northern valor and martial spirit. Upon this slender foundation they erect an enormous superstructure. They swagger, and bluster, and brag with a most feminine modesty. They, they did not even wait for actual rumors to judge in vainglorious yearnings, since they established as a thousand times on paper before the battle of Manassas, and their favorite authors in New York, Philadelphia and Cincinnati continue daily to them us to overwhelming destruction. All things considered, it is really marvellous that the South still survives.

We will venture the assertion that the severest chastisement ever inflicted by us on the Yankees has not elicited from us one half the joyous demonstrations displayed by them. When we built back their bodies at Great Bethel—which was the fault of our victories—the South was scarcely stirred from her propriety. When we sent the "Grand Gulf Army" home, flying and disgraced, the Yankees took to Washington, and the streets through the [illegible] wailed at the loss of hundreds of [illegible] countrymen, whose lives were [illegible] ten thousand ignoble necessaries and Horace A. Wilson McCULLOCH and Pandit drew the doleful list from the [illegible] Lyon, slaughtered nearly half his army, and drove the afflicted remnant far beyond Springfield, there was no unseemly manifestation of enthusiasm, though, as a matter of course, that glorious victory caused profound gratification. Bull, of these exploits was far more important in itself and its consequences than all the successes accomplished by the Federal arms.

The truth is the Vandals of the North grow crazy over the smallest fragment of military good fortune, because their misery is familiar to the most extravagant pitch. They live in an atmosphere of excitement. They talk and act as Byron is said to have written—in earnest. They are nothing, if not in extremes. Marquis, it is but just to acknowledge that the Yankees have been, ever since the commencement of the war, so accustomed to getting thrashed, that when, instead of the usual contingent they expect to receive, they inflict it upon us, they almost lose their wits through excess of delight. Let them then enjoy their latest triumph—let them prosecute it magnificent and unparalleled—let them, if they please, illuminate their principal cities. They have the right to exhibit the most of an era a circumstance. It would be cruel to deny them a jollification on the occasion. Perhaps they may shortly be required to put on sack cloth and ashes.

Says the Louisville Courier of the 31st: Passengers who left Saint Louis yesterday report that the Confederate troops under Ben McCulloch have left Springfield and Lexington, Missouri. Another report says that McCulloch has taken Jefferson City.

MORE TROOPS.—The steamer Scotland, Capt. Shands, which arrived yesterday evening, brought down the Attala Rebels, of Attala parish. They numbered 93 men, rank and file, under the command of Captain D. W. Self; First Lieutenant, L. J. Hall; Second Lieutenant, M. A. Thompson; Junior Second Lieutenant, J. J. Sebley. She also brought down Captain P. M. Rozsdale, First Lieutenant S. P. Lynch and 18 privates of the Rapides Tigers, which company arrived in this city last week.

MORE TROOPS FROM TEXAS.—Two companies of Texas troops arrived by an extra train of the Opelousas Railroad yesterday. They are the Grimes County Grays, Capt. Hutchinson, of the Second Division, and the Waverley Confederates, Captain Powell, of the Third Division. They number 180 men, rank and file.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—Mr. I. H. Martin yesterday received the annexed despatch from his son, who is Adjutant of the Second Regiment of the Polish Brigade:

ASHLAND, VA., Sept. 2, 1861.

To J. N. Martin—Your son has been shattered here by a collision. All the officers killed. One man was killed and twelve wounded.

ALEXANDER MARIA.

FEDERAL WOUNDED PRISONERS.—The New York Tribune publishes a letter from a prisoner at Richmond, giving the names of six hundred and eighty wounded Federals in the hospitals of Richmond. Many of them are reported dead of their wounds. What a commentary upon the so-called official report of the leaders of the Grand Army.

THE EUREKA HAIR RESTORATIVE.—We invite attention to the [illegible] of this celebrated restorative. We have before us a large number of certificates, many of them from respectable citizens of New Orleans, attesting the efficacy of the fluid in preventing the hair from falling, and in restoring the original color when gray. The Hair Restorative is for sale by all the druggists in the city.

LATE PAPERS.—We are under obligations to Mr. C. E. McCarthy, the enterprising news agent of the Opelousas Railroad, for late Louisiana papers.

BITTEN BY A RATTLESNAKE.—[illegible] the Meschebeff of last Saturday night a negro woman, belonging to Mr. Valcour Aime, was bitten by a rattlesnake on the thigh, and that she died twelve hours after the bad event of the poisoned to her system. This is the second case of the kind that we have recorded within the past month.

The New York Daily News of the 30th ult. has the annexed melody and sprightly notes. The editor must console himself for the present with the reflection that "Truth crushed to earth, will rise again." The successors will now oppress him well, in their turn, under retribution!

To the Subscribers of the N. Y. Daily News:

The subscribers to the New York Daily News, a weekly News who reside beyond the limits of the city of New York will take notice that their copies, delivered them by the carriers, have been discontinued, by order of the Postmaster General, and that no more will be sent to them unless they are paid in advance. Such order is imperative, therefore, to defy the authorities towards its patrons; but subscribers are assured that every one will be entered to receive their [illegible], and that the News will, by physical force, the New York Post Office to accomplish its fierce fearful and [illegible], and will accomplish it, spite of the [illegible] Postmaster, even though it be at the risk of property, personal liberty, and life.

The Penn Gazette Democrat has the following:

HAS REFERENCE TO LINCOLN.—We passed a short time last night with Capt. Hilton, who had died of the wounds he received in a duel. He was shot in the left breast, the ball passing through the lungs, and coming out in the back. He was in a very critical condition. The accident occurred in a field on the Kentucky side of the Ohio river, opposite this city, on Saturday last. The cause of the duel we have not learned. Capt. Hilton is a native of Louisiana.
