LINCOLN'S MANIFESTO.

The paper of Saturday morning contained a telegraphic synopsis of Lincoln's annual message. We have to question the entire accuracy of the report. As far as we can judge from the paper, we should say that the President's message was delivered in full, and his final document. In connection with probe by nine-tenths of the people who had advanced some display of boldness, vigor and de-courage, together with an earnest avowal of the cause of the country to which he has given it. It is largely reticent, meekly apologizing, and abounds in trivial suggestions and half-expressions of vanity which the writer seems afraid openly to propose. In short it is an execrable mongrel parading of personal tact and the dainty of the brush, but with a depraved quality of the former ingredient.

The very initiatory sentence betrays the incertain and dubious nature of the Bee. Can it find no evidence of their friendship to him than by an appeal to their pecuniary resources—asserting then that their supply of cotton is only to be obtained through the preservation of the Union? And this he does coolly as if he had not known that the South Carolinians were giving their cotton to the slaves expressly to prevent them from being sold and stolen by his Van-dell soldiers. In the same spirit does Lincoln, in his Plots to England to report the War and Sidelit to the Home Government.

From Savannah—General Retief Fauster at Port Royal—Savannah, December 7.

ports that General Fauster has arrived at Port Royal, and is now in command of the troops there. And he has been given the rank of Major General.

From Memphis.

Memphis, December 7.—A newspaper published in the St. Louis papers states that General Price has issued a proclamation to the people of the West, in which he says: "I am here to protect the people of the West, and to defend the rights of the slaves." The paper adds:

"The oysterman has arrived here, and brought with him the news of the battle of Fort Donelson, and he has come to inform us that
