The Winter in the Quarters.

The intense cold which has prevailed for nearly two weeks in this city has, it seems, been even more severely felt in the camps of Gen. Sherman, one of the oldest residents in St. Louis, writes on the 4th instant that all the soldiers came on the sugar plantations had been destroyed, as most of the planters, having learned what fate many they had relied upon unfortunately came for the most part, a number of individuals in command, evidently by bottomless, seized they are planted in camp. It is also stated that the sand which had been blown up into mud-hills, will be seriously damaged. Mr. Lapice writes that the thermometer, Fahrenheit's, the freezing point of which is 32 degrees, on the 1st of January, at 18; on the 2d, at 21; on the 3d, at 20; on the 7th, at 29; and on the 8th, at 32. On the 3d, 4th and 5th, the country was deluged with torrents of rain; on the 6th, the rain was followed by a considerable fall of snow. On the 8th there were still traces of snow on the ground, which was completely frozen.

Mules the last of January the executive could not compelled the planters to suspend their work; the negroes, not daring to leave their quarters, cannot be induced to come out of their cabins. The sick suffers in an equal degree from the terrible weather.

There is little doubt that all the orange trees are blighted, and that generality to enroll the list of disasters which have already fallen upon poor Louisiana!

We have been assured that in the neighborhood of Baton Rouge the ground was covered with snow to the depth of six inches, and that it was about a foot deep there Port Hudson.

The winter of 1863-4 will not soon be forgotten by the people of Louisiana.
