Mr. Sumner's Attack on the President.

On the 30th December, Mr. Sumner renewed his attack of the day previous on the President. A Washington correspondent of the 30th writes:

Our radical Congressmen are evidently on discovering to-day the way for their consolidation towards a complete and general enmity to the reconstruction policy of the President. The abrupt and intemperate harangue of Mr. Sumner, in the conduct of negro schools, and introducing Message received from the President yesterday, by Senator Sumner, has evidently given the door for him to-day, and he might give the keynote of subscription to the equivocal terms of his attack. Accordingly Senator Wilson again opened his batteries on the abrogation of all laws passed by the Confederate States, and Sumner followed in remarks occupying about an hour and forty minutes. The speech in question was nothing more than an elaborate reiteration of Mr. Sumner's private correspondence from the South, from officers in the service of the Freedmen's Bureau, strong minded spinsters, and others in the conduct of negro schools, and interlarded with copious notes from the report of Carl Schurz. The tenor of all these epistles, which were anonymous, so far as the Senate was allowed to know, strongly reprobated the latitude allowed the South in returning its civil government, the wholesale course of pardoning that the President had followed, and the want of honest loyalty to the Union even among the reconstructionists of those States. A sufficient quantity of "frightful examples" of tortured negroes and outraged New England school mistresses were thrown in to furnish dramatic effect to the composition of hardly unwarranted emotion during their recital. Nor did the Senator fail to avow that he remembered well the spirit of the white-whispering meanness of yesterday, and the "pusillanimity" of to-day, and the "pusillanimity" of to-morrow, in the conduct of affairs. And so, when bloodshine were known to have completely ceased, were passive submission prevailed, and unalterable fidelity in the light of a reconstructed Union was the order of the day, he stands for the horrors of a hospital, and no doubt subsequent editors did not journey to speak up smartly; and no doubt it was the sight, upheld subsequent acquaintance that baffled efforts to forget the horrors from which the wars delivered.

But when we rose to the intensity of the agony through which the South passed from the effect of Sherman's march to the sea, and of Hood's disaster, to the dissolution and misfortune of Lee's historic army in the field, and the practice of its various corps. His office is at 76 Camp Street, New Orleans.

The "Scalper."—Mr. Geo. Jacobsberger, of that excellent confectionery, the "Scalper," opposite the Picayune, wishes a happy New Year to a number of his friends, whose contents will find their accompanying compliments with a cordial reception.

The Postponed Benevolent Agency:—This worthy fraternity turned out yesterday in appropriate style for the reception and consecration of a flag of beauty that will encourage the hearts of the friends of the poor of the Church of St. Louis. We acknowledge the compliment of some first class ponderment by the hand of the Association in front of our office.

Blake, Stauffer & Co.—Planters and country merchants are referred to the ad. in this issue in which they will find a large assortment of hardware, implements, &c., as well as the latest improved agricultural implements, and it is well for them to know that the old, extensive and reliable hardware house of Blake, Stauffer & Co., 71 Canal street, is in receipt of a large assortment of the best wares which they will sell on most reasonable terms.

Carpenters, &c.—Mr. A. T. Shivers, "Empire Corridor," at Hawkins' Coffee House, opposite the St. Charles Hotel, has compliments of the season for Crow's patrons of visiting, and with a New Year's present of visiting cards, in the latest styles, which are handsomely executed in colors and finish. Mr. Shivers writes his cards with almost incredible facility and rapidity, making them equal in distinctness and accuracy to any that can emanate from engraved plates.

"Why Don't the Girls Say 'Yes'?"—This is one of the select songs by Mrs. E. Holmeadon, and published by A. E. Blackmar, 167 Canal street. The music by "Osgood," is quite gracefully adapted to the words, which are sprightly and in keeping with the theme.

The Organ.—$5 lover of exquisite music and of operatic entertainment can afford to forget that the opening nite is the rare occasion of the performance at the Opera House of the grand opera of Don Giovanni, by Mozart's masterpiece. With the aid of Mr. Strakosch's troupe, including the three prima donnas, (Ortolani, Fabbri, Brambach, and Candiani, and Signore Krauss, Susini and Gentile, will take part in this representation.

Southern Rurality.—We have received the first number of a weekly paper by this name, published at Anderson City La., under the editorial management of H. A. Jenney, M. D. The causes of this publication, indication in general character and its mission, and these are appropriately illustrated in the current issue. In its list of contributors we observe the name of Dr. M. W. Phillips, one of the oldest, most practical and successful planters in the State, and whose contributions will be important to the success of the paper. We are also pleased to see that Dr. Phillips will be a regular contributor, and that, therefore, it will have practical and reliable information in relation to the cultivation of the staple, and also useful and valuable rural paragraphing. The price for the paper is $2.

A Tabulary Anniversary Celebration.—The Society of Tabulary, or Columbian Order, the oldest and most influential political Association of New York, prepares on the 8th inst. to celebrate in a manner worthy of the occasion the centennial of the birth of New Orleans by giving a "Tabulary Ball and Supper" at the Academy of Music. It would appear to be one of the chief objects of the Association not to be exempt, for the Hon. Wm. Hall and the Hon. Silas, of providing as much entertainment for the members as possible, and consequently introducing and encouraging those in which all classes in all parts of the country can meet on the common ground of hospitality. We learn that a number of invitations have been issued to the Tabulary Committee, signed by John Van Buren and Colonel Fellows, which contained the above remarks.

Since the establishment of the Society in 1799, it has ever commanded the esteem in the highest degree of the community, and has always been the means of encouraging the patriotism and strengthening their devotion to and attachment to the Union, amongst those now in the field, and has been the means of sending many gallant officers to the North Western Frontier to protect the settlers, and closed the year 1865 in a blaze of glory.

The Bee has given rise to the following, in the shape of resolutions of condolence and sympathy, which we find in the Charleston Courier, of the 27th instant. They are worthy of the men from which they are issued, and which re-united general fraternity and confidence, and which re-united the Union of the States, and our glorious Republic. It is in this spirit, and with a perfect appreciation of the generous sentiments of the writers of these resolutions, that we publish them in the hope that the flame of Peace and Fraternity may be kindled in the hearts of the people of the whole country, and thus secure the permanent security of Constitutional Liberty.

Agricultural Preparations in Texas.—We read in a recent number of the Houston (Texas) Telegraph:

"The labor of a great many contracts have been made for the next year. In some, we believe, the old negroes have engaged themselves, and will be ready to go to work when the spring opens. Generally, however, the negroes will not engage themselves for a longer time than a month at a time, and for such wages as they can get from month to month. Some planters have engaged their hands for a share of the crop, and others for a stipulated sum per month. Many of the negroes have engaged themselves to the same planters they worked for last year, and, therefore, it will be difficult to say what the wages will be. Some have promised a share of the crop, and others a stipulated sum per month, and others have engaged themselves for a share of the crop, and a stipulated sum per month. Some have engaged themselves for a share of the crop
