THE NEW ORLEANS DAILY DELTA.

DUPUOY & LEREE, Proprietors.

Office, No. 72 Chartres street.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

Spaces.	1 day.	2 days.	3 days.	4 days.	5 days.	6 days.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY DELTA,

Is published on Tuesdays and Fridays, at $5 per annum.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

Spaces.	1 mo.	2 mos.	3 mos.	6 mos.

PAMPHLETS

OF THE

Democracy of the United States,

ADOPTED BY

A Convention held at Delegates to Nominate Candidates for President and Vice President.

The Democratic party in Federal Convention assembled, in the exercise of the right and duty of self-government, proclaim the following as the principles upon which alone they can hope to receive the support of the American people, and as the only principles upon which they will accept the support of any portion of the people of the United States.

1. That the Federal Government is a government of limited powers, derived solely from the Constitution, and the grants of power therein enumerated, and that it has no power not therein delegated, or clearly necessary to execute the powers granted; that it is inexpedient and unjust to exercise doubtful constitutional powers; that the powers not granted to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people; and that the maintenance of the rights of the States and the distribution of the powers of the Federal Government among the three departments of the latter, and the checks and balances between them, are vitally necessary to the preservation of our liberties, and the perpetuation of our Federal Union.

2. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

3. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

4. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

5. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

6. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

7. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

8. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

9. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

10. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

11. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

12. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

13. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

14. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

15. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

16. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

17. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

18. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

19. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

20. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

21. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

22. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

23. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

24. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

25. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

26. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

27. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

28. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

29. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

30. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

31. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

32. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

33. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

34. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

35. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

36. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

37. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

38. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

39. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

40. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

41. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

42. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

43. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

44. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

45. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

46. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

47. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

48. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

49. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

50. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

51. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

52. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

53. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

54. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

55. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

56. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

57. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

58. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

59. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

60. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

61. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

62. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

63. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

64. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

65. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

66. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

67. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

68. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

69. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

70. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

71. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

72. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

73. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

74. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

75. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

76. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

77. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

78. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

79. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

80. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

81. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

82. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

83. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

84. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

85. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

86. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

87. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

88. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

89. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

90. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

91. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

92. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

93. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

94. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

95. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

96. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

97. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

98. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

99. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

100. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

101. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

102. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

103. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

104. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

105. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

106. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

107. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

108. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

109. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

110. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

111. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

112. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

113. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

114. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

115. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

116. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

117. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

118. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

119. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

120. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

121. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

122. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

123. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

124. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

125. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

126. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

127. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

128. That the Federal Government is not charged by the Constitution with the duty of providing for internal improvements, and that the exercise of such power by the Federal Government, except in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the removal of obstructions to navigation, is unauthorized by the Constitution, and highly dangerous to the rights of the States, and to the liberties of the people.

129.