At the opening factors were disposed to be more stringent in their protensions, but after a few pressing orders for the New York market were filled, buyers were auwilling to go on at previous rates, and in order to effect sales it became necessary to meet the demand more firely. Hence prices ruled more in favor of buyers, and in several cases figures were accepted indicating a decline of fully ke, willie in others factor realized previous rates. The demand was fair, but operations were restricted both by the limited supply on sale, and buyers claiming greater concessions than factors were wrilling to admit.
