THE GRAIN TRADE AND HOW TO REGAIN IT.

The very profusion of our resources is perhaps a bar to our progress. Cotton worth one hundred millions of dollars, sugar worth twelve or fifteen millions more—the contracts for levee or street repairs, the salaries of the Federal and State offices—all these so occupy our people that they do not look to other articles of export and import trade of the utmost value. Our trade is of one season. A commerce adequate to the support of a large urban population, should be of all seasons. We once enjoyed a large export trade of Western provisions. Even grain was exported in sacks—estimated to coal 3d more than in bulk—occasionally a bulk shipment had to be made, and then from the want of facilities of shipment, it was exported and received abroad in bad order. This induced a charge even now used to our prejudice, that grain shipped in bulk could not go through New Orleans in sound condition. Experience has shown, that with the same preparation as elsewhere, grain goes through New Orleans as sound as by any other route. We have substituted schooner-built barges, moved by steam, for the flatboat, drifting with and delayed by the current. The Elevator has succeeded the sack and warehouse. The steamer has carried grain to Europe in mid-summer, which sold for five cents more than grain of the same class exported from Eastern ports. What then stands in the way of our conducting this commerce, worth in the aggregate some sixty millions of dollars annually? We will endeavor to answer: 1st. It is a great export trade almost indispensible to the seaports of the East. It is to them what cotton is to us. Hence they have furnished every facility for attracting it over the artificial and direct routes between the West and East. They offer it cheap freights to Europe. They transfer it from rail to boat, and ship at a very small charge. In a word, it is their object to make grain nett to the farmer the largest price. 2d. The cost of transporting a bushel of wheat from a point in the North or West by rail, canal, or a combination of these modes, is about sixty cents. The cost of the same service by way of the Mississippi river does not exceed thirty-five cents. There is some disadvantage however in our route. There is a difference against us of, perhaps, 30 per cent. in the transit time. Our port and commercial charges are quite heavy. 3d. Cotton, being more valuable, can pay a higher freight than grain. There is not sufficient tonnage at present in this port to carry the cotton and grain away which is now waiting shipment.

There is not enough of suitable river tonnage to accommodate the grain business. There is not believed to be the possible capital enough to handle this crop. With the acknowledged importance of this trade, and the known fact that Chicago cannot, for some time, extend the facilities required to conduct it, we can see no reason why New Orleans may not succeed to her own just inheritance. The disadvantage of her transit time is more than counteracted by the fact that the navigation of the North west is blockaded from November to May. During this time the grain trade must be conducted by rail. When we state that a row and barge will float down at one trip as much grain as can be moved by ten locomotives with three hundred cars, it will be seen that we can, with adequate river and ocean tonnage, deliver far more grain in a given time than any railway system at present in operation. With the introduction of steam propellers, sail vessels will disappear, and the change for tonnage will be taken off. We must organize a line of barges to run in connection with grain propellers, and from recent information the British ship-owners are sending over propellers to take these grain cargoes. There can then be a separate tonnage provided to take grain independent of Cotton. There will be enough for each. There can be no question but that ample capital can be commanded to buy and ship all the grain of the West. We have certainly as much capital here in New Orleans as they have in Chicago. Nothing, indeed, is necessary to command the capital except the ownership of the grain and the capacity to send it forward to Liverpool or New York. The transaction is simple. The grain is purchased and forwarded to New Orleans. It is delivered in elevators. Certificates of storage, quantity and class are delivered with the bill of lading and policy of insurance. A draft on these, as collateral will, with a small margin, command a discount and advance in our banks or in any other. This exchange may be even sold in New York and the currency brought to New Orleans. With the proceeds of these bills, the purchaser of grain is indemnified. The grain in fact pays for itself.

We have shown then that nothing is necessary to make a trade in grain at this port, except the practical organization of transport, on and from shore. Our merchants will only need to adopt the new practice indorsed in these respects elsewhere, and New Orleans can readily regain a trade which nature has done so much to assure her.

BEWARE OF THE BURGLARS.—The number of burglaries which have taken place in the city lately—some of them in the Second District—should stimulate the inhabitants to extraordinary vigilance. We are informed that several dwellings on Rampart street, between St. Louis and Esplanade streets, have been visited by these midnight prowlers without detection.

A TYPOGRAPHICAL ERROR.—We were made by an error of the types in an article in our issue of yesterday, to reflect upon the character of the members of the Legislature of Louisiana of the years 1868 and 1867, when the personnel of the body was equal to that of any similar house in the State in ante-bellum times.

THE SOUTHERN COLLEGIAN.—The Times thus notices the Collegian and one of its principal editors, Gabriel Santini, son of our most estimed citizen, Mr. Jos. Santini:

Among our exchanges we are pleased to welcome The Collegian, a very sprightly little sheet, published by the students of the Washington and Lee University. One of the editors, Mr. Gabriel Santini is from New Orleans, the son of our old and universally esteemed fellow-citizen, Jos. Santini, that whom no man in the State has done more in the cause of popular education. It is gratifying to note that the son's son is worthy of the sire's name and fame, and that his college editorials have a ring about them which betokens not only culture, but good taste, allied with good judgment. Louisiana must feel pride in all her young men who essay the role of public life. The State has never more prosperous than at present for the advent of new men, and unless much at fault in forecasting, Mr. Gabriel Santini's name will in due time become much more prominent and familiar to our citizens than it is now, in connection with this clever little college newspaper.

DELAYS ARE DANGEROUS.—Mothers as you love your offspring don't fail to use Mrs. Whitcomb's Syrup for soothing children.

EXTENSION OF THE JACKSON RAILROAD. The Louisville (Winston county) Banner has the following gratifying paragraph:

We learn that the Corps of Engineers are actually engaged in surveying the proposed route of the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad from Meridian to this place, to Aberdeen. We hope the corps will meet a warm reception from, and will be amply provided for by the people of Winston, along the proposed line.

An Exchange says that in 1866 no less than 11,456 persons in the Bengal Presidency died from the effects of snake bite.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Paris, Oct. 21.—While Prince Napoleon was on his way to Marseilles, as the train stopped at the town of Valence, the people who had learned of the Prince's journey, gathered about the railway station and demanded his surrender into their hands. Fortunately, the train passed under the safe conduct of the Gendarmerie, they vented their hatred in hisses, yells and threats, which followed the train until it had passed the limits of the town.

Gambetta publishes a letter saying, though the Republicans of France were defeated in the elections, they had elected the Conseils Généraux, he finds nothing to regret to cause despondency. The election has clearly distinguished the hopes of those retrogradists who cherished to see France accommodated to the Bonapartes, and shows plainly the manner definite and scholarly; his English of the purest type. There is scarcely any account attainable on the Continent of Marshall Bazaine, it is curious how the Emperor could have decided on acting upon his services. The letter concludes with these remarkable words: "The fact is that Marshall Maximilian is far from being a fool. He expresses himself with great facility, has a vast fund of information, and his conversation is peculiarly seductive."

There appears little doubt about the French government, from various motives having done what it could to persuade the unfortunate Maximilian to withdraw from Mexico. Indeed it is well known what feelings the news of the tragedy of Queretaro was received at the Tuileries. When the news was taken on the 6th of September, photographs were found of Maximilian's person, of his wife Carlotta, and of the last clothes worn by the Imperial victim.

The Decline of the Health of the Queen of England.

London Correspondence of the New York Times.

The Queen's health is still an object of great anxiety, notwithstanding the more favorable reports from Balmoral. It is now known that she has been suffering from a severe complication of disorders, and although the principal maladies are not serious in themselves, they indicate an enfeebled and morbid constitution. It is said that both under the sea and on the railway she has insisted upon the windows being closed, replied in an offensive manner, and was shot dead by a trooper, A. C. Badger, a private soldier has killed.

Chicago, Oct. 21.—Henry Greenebaum, a leading israelite and President of the German National Bank, has received from his brethren in Jerusalem, who for centuries have depended upon the country for liberal contributions for relief of their own and other religious denominations of this city.

Cincinnati, Oct. 21.—Two houses and a barn filled with grain were burned last night near St. Marys, Ohio, from fire which is supposed among the grass and drift wood yesterday.

The farmers in the vicinity have plowed seven thousand acres of their bottoms and farms to-day, and if the weather is favorable the whole will be completed without further damage.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

To-night will be the last one of the engagement of the Ital. Dramatic Company. Mlle. Ristori and the Academy, and others who have not enjoyed their tragedies should not miss the opportunity. To-morrow night the Mobile Minstrels make their first appearance at the Academy. They are highly spoken of in other cities where they have performed.

We acknowledge the principle of complimentary tickets to an exhibition of parlascope, which is to be given at the Crescent Rink, on the first week of this month.

Yesterday morning, the police received information that a fire had occurred in the basement of the residence of Mr. William Quintard, and that her very unsteady in the rear of the house. The alarm was passed by a policeman, but he could hear into the yard before he could hail it.

The furniture of the Mutual Benefit League, which was destroyed by the fire of Thursday night, was insured in the Crescent City Insurance Company for $1,000.

The market opened with a declining tone after the panic, but, dispelled by the London money market and the withdrawal of the support operations, have all the characteristics of a speculative market.

WEATHER REPORT.

Washington, Oct. 21.—The area of high barometer has moved southeast and and is off Cape Hatteras, and quite low barometer apparently prevails in Canada where the pressure has fallen very rapidly to-day. Southwesterly winds, increasing in brisk at some places have prevailed on the middle Atlantic and on the lakes. Northeasterly winds in the South Atlantic States, and southerly winds from the Ohio Valley south and west. The temperature has risen from the East Atlantic west to the Mississippi. Cloudiness has very generally increased, and light rain or threatening weather is reported from North Florida and at some points in Ohio, and the Missouri Valley.

PROBABILITIES.

The barometer will probably continue to fall and cloudy weather, possibly with rain, will prevail on Sunday from the Gulf coast to the Ohio Valley and Middle States. Brisk southwesterly winds will be experienced for a short time on the lower lakes and east Atlantic. Southerly winds with threatening weather will extend eastward into Illinois. Westerly winds with pleasant weather on Lake Superior.

MISCELLANEOUS INTELLIGENCE.

New York, Oct. 21.—The following correspondence explains itself:

"Chicago, Oct. 20.—Hon. Wm. Orton, President.—I am instructed by our Board to express their warmest acknowledgements to your Company for the service rendered to the people of Chicago by General Stager, in perfecting our telegraphic communication between the various distributing points.

(Signed) WIRT DEXTER, Chairm."

"Chicago, Oct. 21.—Wm.
